Waiting lists . . .

from WAITING on page 8

suffer from a major childhood psychiatric disorder.

"We can't handle anywhere near that number," said CATC executive director Dr. Doug Brown. "Demand far exceeds our capabilities."

The current waiting list is about three months, and he said reducing it to two or three weeks "would not be unreasonable."

He also said the children's mental health agencies don't have the funds to compete for staff with employers in other sectors, such as education.

A regional staff report concurred, saying "a social worker can earn approximately $4,000 more within the Halton education system than within the children's mental health system."

The CATC assessed about 150 children over the past year at its Milton location in the E.C. Drury School for the Hearing Impaired.
