

A healthy garden starts from the ground up. Unfortunately, most soils aren't born perfect, they have to be made. To create healthy soil for a beautiful garden, amend the planting bed with Canadian Sphagnum Peat Moss.

Gardening's Essential Ingredient

or ground-up garden refuse mixed with Canadian Peat both make good mulches.

5. Compost

Compost, or decomposed organic matter, is terrific for all-around additional soil boosting. Mixed with Canadian Peat, it makes an excellent nutrient. Because it's composed of organic matter, the mix also goes a long way toward improving soil texture. Vegetable peelings, lawn and garden debris, and coffee grounds all make good compost.

Few soils are born perfect. But being a soil detective helps you create the proper foundation. Beautiful results await you.

Containers

location will probably need to be watered several times per week in warm, sunny weather. Small containers may need daily watering. When you water, water thoroughly, until excess water runs freely from the drainage hole. If water runs right through and out the bottom, the soil in the container has probably dried out and shrunken. Immerse the entire container in water, or let the hose run into it until the soil is soaked through.

Feeding

Generally speaking, plants in containers need to be fertilized regularly while they are actively growing. When using an enriched potting mix like the Sunshine PLUS, you won't need to begin feeding until about four-to-six weeks after planting. Then, start feeding using a complete fertilizer following the label directions. If you are using a fertilizer intended for regular garden plants, dilute it to half the recommended strength.
