Bedroom rules keep daughter far from home

Dear Abby: Our 30-year-old daughter, who lives out of state, refuses to visit us because we insist that while visiting our home, she and her live-in male companion have separate bedrooms.

Meanwhile, she tells friends and relatives that we will not allow her to visit us.

We need some advice about how far parents should go toward making their children feel comfortable and loved while visiting.

Mom and Dad

Dear Mom and Dad: I can understand parents refusing to allow a daughter or son of any age to hunker down in the guest room with any Tom, Dick or Mary, but some people may feel that long-term committed relationships deserve special consideration.

In your home, you make the rules, and your rules should be respected. If you are uncomfortable with the thought of your daughter doing in your home what she does in hers, say so with no apologies.

Telling friends and relatives that you will not allow her to visit is her way of getting even. Should this come up in conversation, promptly set the record straight. In this case, silence is not golden. It would be accepting a bad rap.

Dear Abby: I read in the Chicago Tribune that a judge had ordered a drug dealer to pay for his keep while he served his time in jail, so I wrote the following letter to the editor.

Why not a crime tax, or housing fee? Each criminal sentenced to serve time in jail should be assessed a housing fee. This would put the financial burden where it belongs — on the criminal.

Cook County currently pays the Salvation Army $1.7 million to provide 140 beds a year for its surplus inmates. This figures out to $33.27 per day, per person.

If the county collected $33 per day from each resident, it would cost a dope pusher or drunk driver $990 per month for lodging, goods, clothes and medical expenses. By comparison, a crime victim has to pay that much for only two days of room and board in an average hospital.

Cook County jail now has more than 5,000 inmates. At $33 per day, the residence fee would generate more than $60 million in revenue per year.

Is my theory sound?

James A. Cohen

Dear Mr. Cohen: Your theory is sound, but it is not practical, because most prison inmates cannot afford to pay $990 a month for their lodging, food and clothing.

The fact is, most prison inmates are not only broke when they are incarcerated, their families have to go on welfare.
