Halton Region's controversial 5million tonne garbage dump is slated to open in Milton within two years, but that's not soon enough for Burlington Mayor Roly Bird.

Following a staff report Wednesday outlining the increasing cost of the landfill to more than $36 million from the original $12-15 million, he suggested opening a temporary dump on the site.

Halton, which does not have its own dump at present, spends more than $500,000 a month exporting its garbage.

It's 'war'

Mayor Bird equated the garbage dilemma with a "war" and suggested it wouldn't be won with the current bureaucracy that requires "every 'i' to be dotted and 't' to be crossed."

Referring to another war, he said that when General Patton needed a bridge he had one up in two hours - and that some of them are still standing.

"General Patton," reminded Chief Administrative Officer (CAO) John Fleming, "didn't have to live with the EAA (Environmental Assessment Act) or the EPA (Environmental Protection Act)."

Realistically, the CAO advised that working through the red tape required to open a temporary dump would likely take longer than simply carrying out the final stages of the necessary by studies currently unpermanent dump, scheduled to open in early 1992.

The report to the planning and public works committee, as reported in Wednesday's (July 11) Champion, noted the total $36-million pricetag did not include the cost of constructing a liner in the dump.

At Wednesday meeting, Treasurer Joe Rinaldo further elaborated that the cost of this liner, if it's deemed derway at the site, will be between 10-$15 million.

Liner cost

He stressed, however, that's it's not a new twist. He explained it was a stipulation of the board that approved the dump should the need for a liner would be determined by the detailed site analysis.
