

Lots of fizz, but no chemicals . . .

venture, and, no, he doesn't miss it.
"I had one too many winters working outside in sub zero temperatures," he said, chuckling. "Construction is a young man's game."

Although satisfied the Mississauga operation is central enough for Oakville and Milton customers, he says he'd like to one day locate brew clubs in each of these communities.

He's producing about five orders a day (an order being five cases of 24 beers), which is what he expected to be doing after three months.

"I can go as high as 25 orders," he said. "Hamilton, during the summer, does that. Burlington (referring to another Custom Brew operation in that city) has only been open six months, and they're half way there."

Natural beer has five different ingredients — water, malt, sugar, hops and yeast — and the combination of these ingredients in varying quantities and styles allows for a wide variety of beer flavours.

Gerry has 13 tested and proven recipes (including Czech Pilsner, Australian Lager and Canadian Lager) for easy reference or customers can brew up their creation.

Under staff supervision, the customer measures, mixes and boils the ingredients in an individual kettle.

"The result," say the system creators, "is a fresh tasting, custom brewed beer without additives, preservatives or excessive carbonation."
