New product gives seatbelts a new twist

Motorists nationwide are taking automotive safety into their own hands this spring by installing the new Quintech Life Hammer™ safety tool in their cars.

The innovative Life Hammer safety tool, a small, hammer-like device imported from West Germany, is the first compact consumer product that lets motorists escape quickly from a disabled vehicle when windows and doors are inoperable and safety belt buckles are unreachable.

Since its introduction in Europe in 1985, many safety-minded European motorists have purchased and installed the safety tool. Modeled after the emergency safety hammer found in buses and trains, the product is a standard item with police forces in several European countries.

The lightweight safety tool contains a recessed cutting edge which can be used to cut through the safety belts if the metal clasp is difficult to reach. It has been praised by safety officials and motorists alike as an essential addition to all vehicles equipped with safety belts.

Forty-five states have passed laws making it mandatory for an automobile's occupants to wear safety belts. Now, under a new federal regulation, all 1990 model year automobiles are required to be equipped with automatic safety belts or air bags on the driver side of the front seat.

"The Life Hammer safety tool provides reassurance to those drivers and passengers who otherwise might be reluctant to use safety belts," says Robert Bockweg, president of Quickwheel, Inc., which distributes the tool through its Quintech Products division.

The Life Hammer safety tool also has two tungsten-carbide tips on the "head" of the hammer. Because of its design and strength, a motorist, with a light tap of the hammer, can instantly break side and rear windows that are normally impossible to punch or even kick out. (The side windows in cars manufactured for sale in the U.S. are made with tempered glass which breaks into tiny, smooth-surfaced, pebble-like pieces.) The product is not designed to be used on windshields, which are made of shatter proof glass.

The Life Hammer safety tool has been tested and approved by TÜV, one of Europe's most respected independent testing agencies. It was awarded the Silver Medal of the German Traffic Safety Council and has been endorsed by international safety organizations affiliated with Luxembourg's Prevention Routière Internationale (PRI), a network that promotes road safety.

Quintech Products, Inc. is a division of Quickwheel, Inc., the U.S. marketer of the Quickwheel™ flat tire cradle and the Quickwheel™ snow chain. Quickwheel, Inc. is headquartered in Greenwich, Conn.
