Listening key to teaching, learning

Are you a good listener? Listening is a vital part of communication and good communication is essential to coaching.

Of course you want your athletes to listen to you, but you too can learn from listening. Listen to your athletes, to their parents, to officials. Listening is sharing.

Here are several listening techniques.

1. Attentive listening: Listening starts with attentiveness. You are quiet. Your posture, facial expression, gestures, all indicate attention and acceptance.

2. Paraphrasing: Paraphrasing is saying in your own words what you think the other person said to see if it is what the other person meant.

3. Bridging: From time to time you indicate that you are following what the other person is saying, by nodding or saying 'uh huh' or even 'yes, I see.'

4. Restating: You repeat the last portion of what the person said without changing anything.

5. Inviting clarification: You request the person expand on something he/she has said.

Here is an example:

"Coach, I'm worried about competing today."

"Yes?" (Bridging)

"Yeah I've been talking to the guys."

"The guys?" (Restating)

"Yeah, the guys say the other team really runs over you."

"So you're worried because the other team is good. Is that right?" (Paraphrasing)

"Yeah, that's it."

"Why do you think it's worrying you?" (Inviting clarification)

This athlete will clarify because the coach cares to listen.
