Video to make Milton famous

Milton will soon be put on the map across the country thanks to a 20th century history class at Milton District High School. The Grade 11 students have produced a video on Milton as part of a Canada 125 program involving schools across the country.

The 15 students participating in the class project have used their creativity to put together an attractive presentation of the town, said David Hamilton, head of the social sciences department.

Graphics and information about the town's historic buildings, prominent people, and traditional events such as the Milton Fall Fair and Steam Era are highlighted in the video disc presentation.

The video will become part of a collection of presentations from across the country put together in Ottawa on one tape in celebration of Canada's 125th birthday.

Much research went into the project headed by teacher Angela Grimsey, said Mr. Hamilton. The students also created their own art work for the video display, as well.
