

Hospital staff plays it safe this week

Canadian Occupational Health and Safety Week hasn't gone unnoticed at Milton District Hospital.

With the theme, "working with you for your safety and well-being," the hospital's Joint Health and Safety Committee put together activities and displays for 320 staff members during the special week June 27 to 27.

"Whether individuals are transferring patients, sorting laundry, cleaning, working in a lab, or sitting together on a joint health and safety committee, team work is crucial," said a member of the committee.

"Lower accident rates translate into a happier, healthier, and more productive workplace."

Among the activities organized for staff were patient transfer and lift demonstrations as well as quizzes on first aid and safety.

Those who normally look after the health of others were reminded about their own well-being at Milton District Hospital this week. Recognizing Canadian Occupational Health and Safety Week, the hospital's health and safety committee organized special activities and displays for staff. Here, David Tonelli undergoes a patient transfer and lift demonstration with (from left) Martha Shire, Sandra Callery, and Helen McKay.
