Hitchin' a ride

A hole-in-one at the Milton Chamber of Commerce 3rd annual golf tournament will earn the lucky golfer this NS 1600 M5 from North End Nissan and Nissan Canada. Doug Peddie of H. J. M. Police exonerated from wrongdoing in OPP investigation

He also praised the reaction OPP investigators got from Halton officers during the probe.

"I must say, the Halton police were most co-operative when our investigators were there. They couldn't have opened their doors any wider. They had absolutely nothing to hide."

Inspector Van der Lelie said "everybody is sort of glad this is over," on the force.

"Whenever the private life of an officer is queried, it spooks us all a little bit. The (police) service itself is brought into question. All of that taints morale."

While stressing that he didn't want "to put her on the spot," inspector Van der Lelie said police officers are disappointed with the manner in which councillor Johnston handled the letter. "We feel what she did was inappropriate. In hindsight, I'm sure she may wish to reconsider."

"I did what I thought was right," councillor Johnston said Monday. She reiterated her previous stance, saying she never expected the letter to become public.

Councillors were clearly taken by surprise when Ms Johnston dropped copies of the text on their desks shortly before the June 3 meeting began. They voted to shred the letter rather than discuss it. Ms Johnston had already left the meeting, later citing a previous engagement.

Ms Johnston "did what she thought was right," but "I would have dealt with it in the way it should have been dealt with," Mr. Quinn said. The controversial letter belonged at the police board instead of regional council. "It's not regional council's business."

Mr. Quinn said he got complaints from constituents who criticized devoting police manpower to investigating allegations "dealing with rumours. I got calls from people in the community saying, 'what is it that you're doing?'"

Mr. Quinn deplored the fact that "two senior (OPP) investigators were taken off duty" to beat the bushes in the matter. He also would like to see the issue dropped, now. "I don't think there has to be any other follow up. People have to get on with serious policing matters."
