

Are you stuck painting soffits? Suffer no more

Some homeowners have an unpleasant chore hanging over their heads: scraping and painting wood soffit. Soffit? It's the paneling that covers the bottom of roof overhangs, porch and balcony ceilings, and other exterior overhead structures. Nobody enjoys standing on a ladder for hours, scraper in hand, head tilted upwards, while flakes of old paint fall in his face. But if you neglect wood soffit boards, they'll turn into an ugly eyesore. Soffit sufferers can end their misery by replacing wood soffit with maintenance-free aluminum-soffit panels that never need painting. Aluminum is lightweight and easy to work with, says Gary Heitsch of Rollex Corporation, which manufactures aluminum and vinyl soffit. High-quality aluminum soffit has a durable baked-on acrylic finish and comes in a range of updated colors.

Many people choose white soffit panels out of habit," Heitsch says, "but builders and remodelers have begun using aluminum soffit in attractive contemporary colors for architectural accents.
