

Third generation farmers keep 4-H in the family

When it comes to the 4-H Club, Ken and Marie McNabb of Callumlea Farm know what it's all about.

The couple have spent much of their lives involved in, and enthusiastic about, the Halton 4-H Club.

Ken, who was born on the dairy farm he now operates on Trafalgar Road, was a member for eight years and has been a leader for 20 years. He has completed an impressive 24 projects as a member and 25 projects as a leader. Now he is also president of the Halton 4-H Club.

Mr. McNabb described the 4-H Club as a family tradition that saw his parents and siblings involved and his father as a leader.

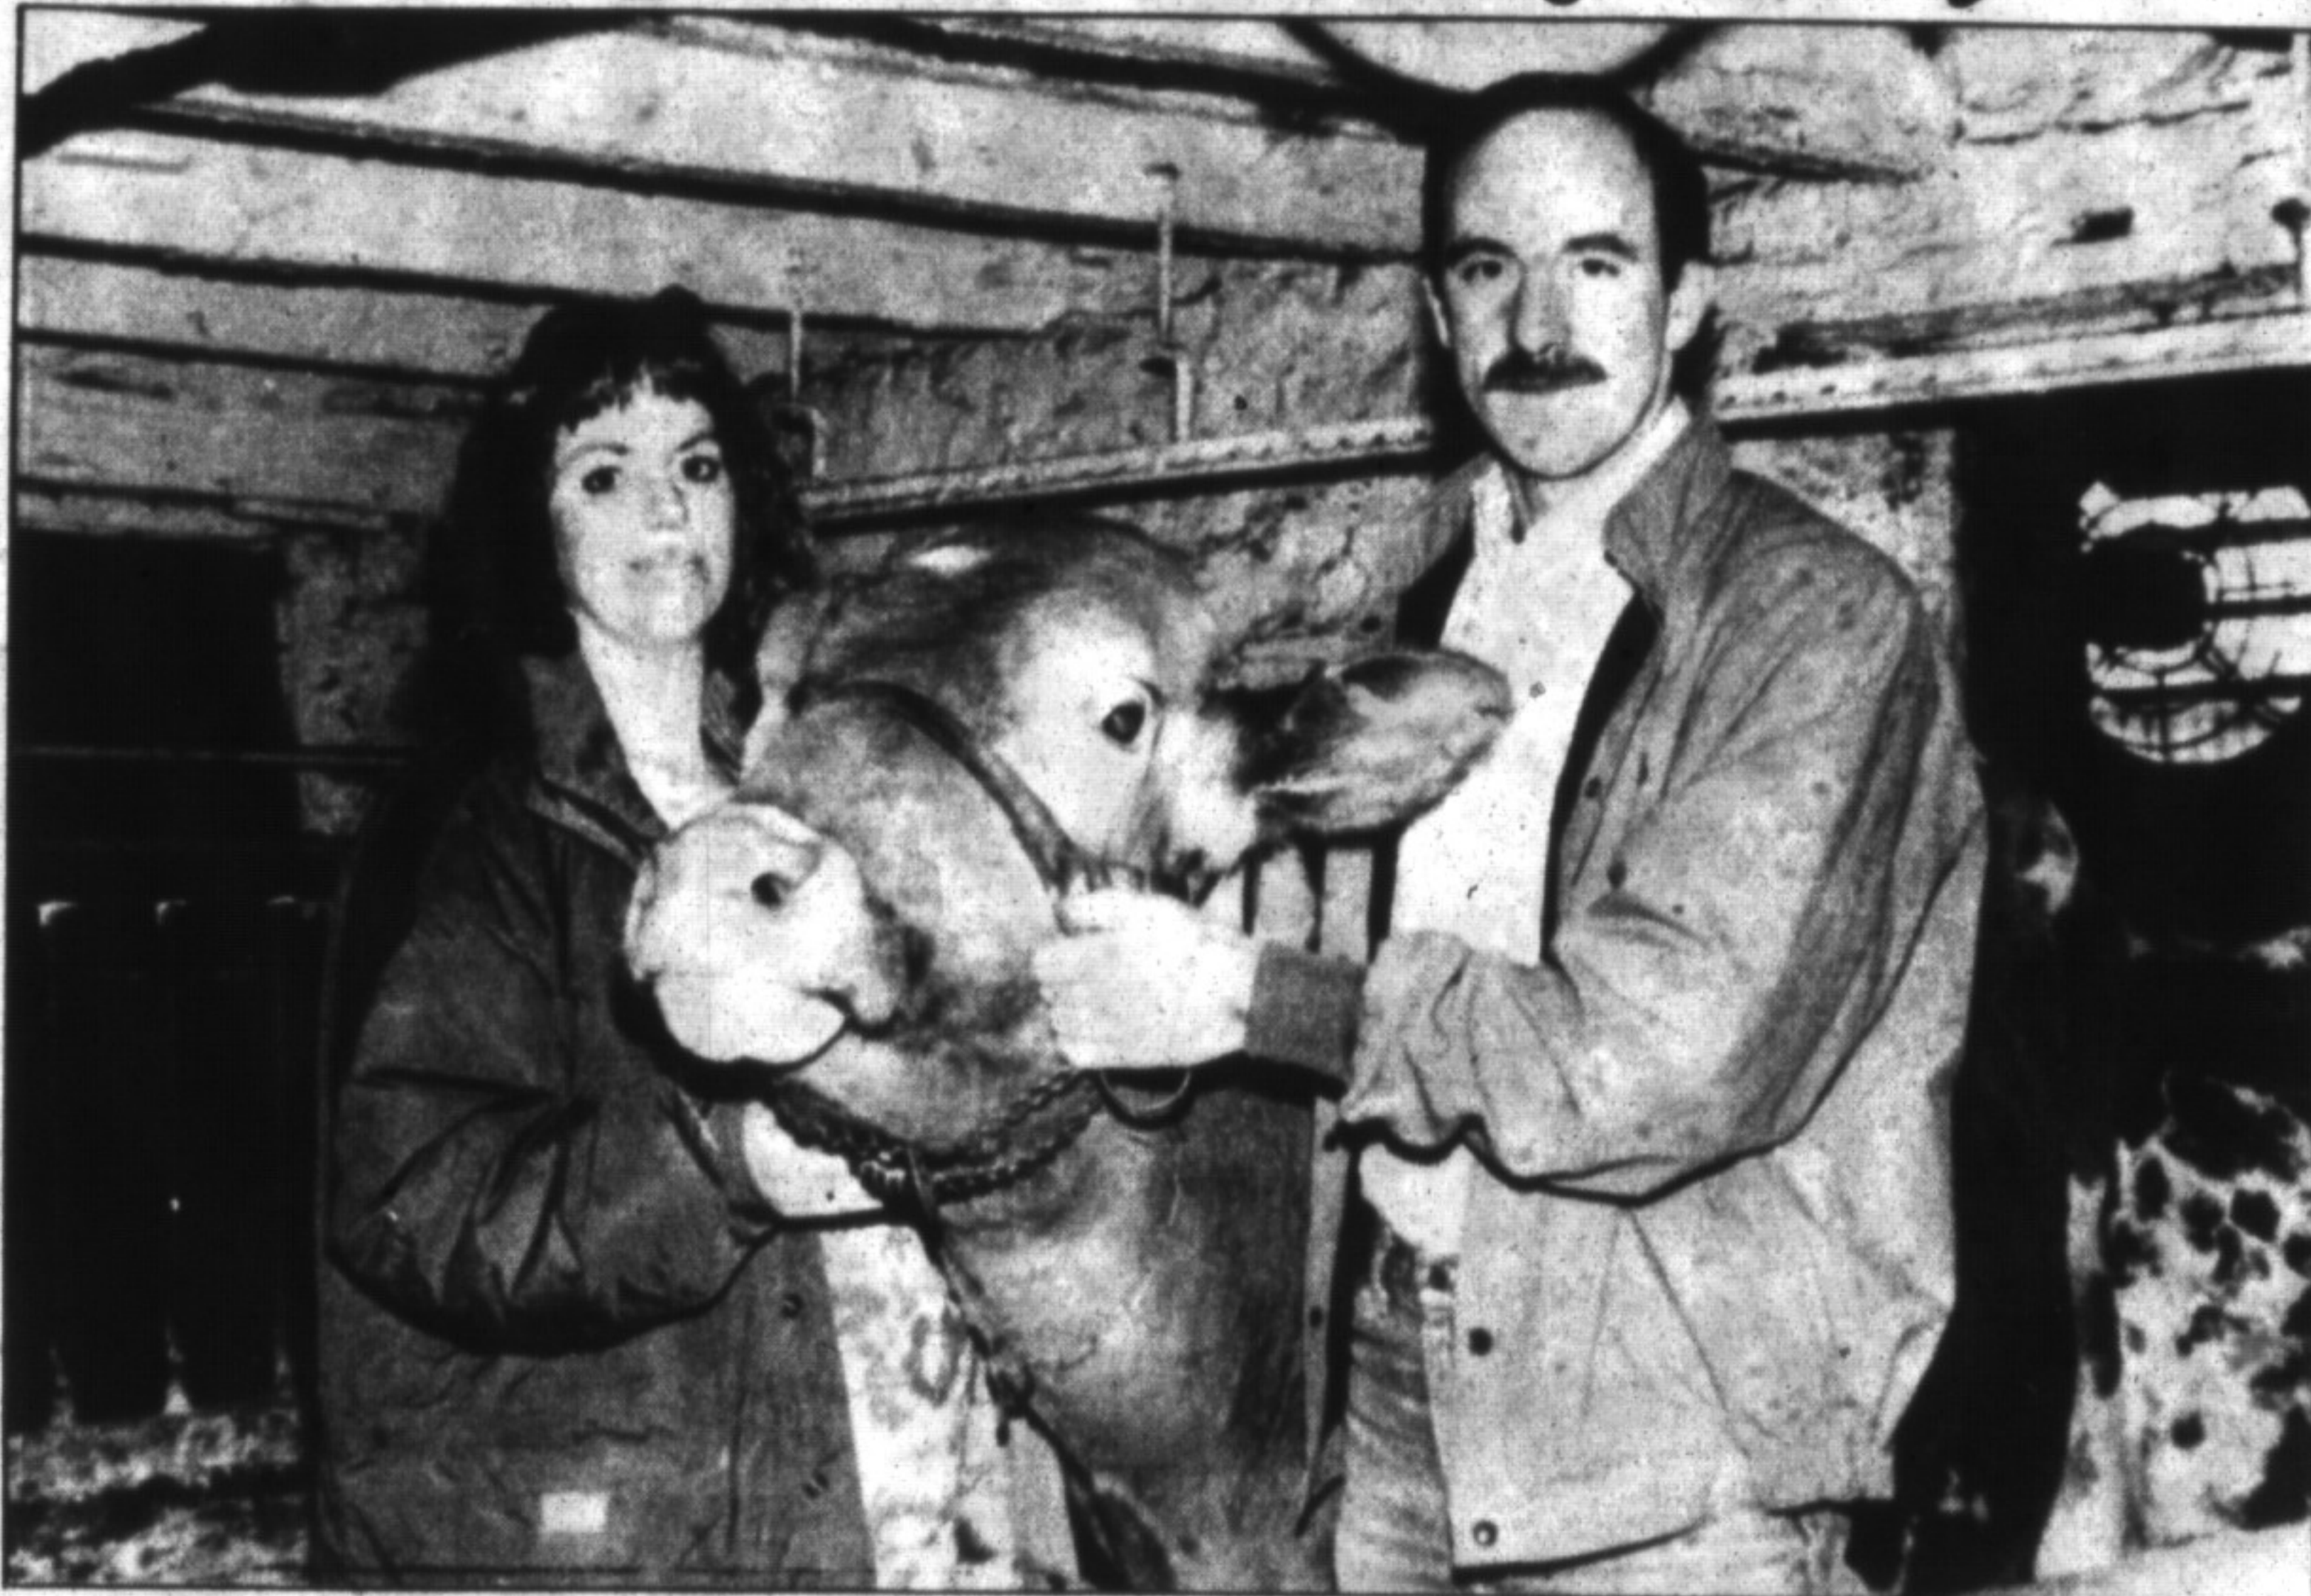

"I just love working with the kids," Mr. McNabb said with a smile. "I get a real charge out of it."

Mr. McNabb continues to lead a 4-H dairy at his Callumlea Farm, in its third generation of producing milk.

Some 70 head of brown-and-white Guernsey cows help to educate the kids. The four main topics are marketing, herd health, nutrition and housing.

Marie McNabb was also a 4-H member and leader. Currently Marie serves as a farm management specialist with the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food. Both she and her husband have degrees in agriculture from the University of Guelph.

Ken and Marie just had their first son, Colin Hartley, who was born March 29. No doubt in time he will also follow in Mom and Dad's footsteps and become an avid 4-H member in Halton.

Dairy farm owners Marie and Ken McNabb are firm believers in the benefits of membership and leadership in Halton 4-H Club, having served in each capacity.
