

Church's visual comment on abortion draws reactions

from ANTI-ABORTION on pg. 1
 see kids upset, but there are lots of churches with real graveyards right beside them," he noted. Parents "should be quite capable" of explaining such activities, indeed, "it's everybody's responsibility to explain it."
 "All children have to face it sooner or later. If they're taught properly it should not harm them," Mr. Kennedy added.
 The Knights of Columbus announced their plans for the initiative in the church bulletin well prior to erecting the display, and reaction has been "generally very favourable," Mr. Kennedy pointed out, although "one or two persons might have said something."

The Holy Rosary Catholic elementary school is next door to the church.
 While a school representative declined public comment on the matter, it was made clear that the grounds for the display are "philosophically sound."
 Nancy Dickson, the principal of Martin Street School, said Monday she had heard no complaints from parents about the display.
 "If even two parents came to see me, I'd probably delve into it," she added.
 Ms Dickson said that if concerns arise she will likely discuss the issue with her teachers so as to map a strategy for tackling it among students.

In large part the Knights of Columbus built the display to demonstrate support for Bishop A.P. Tonnos. The Bishop circulated a pastoral letter in late April warning that a provincial government task force is recommending Ontario make abortions more accessible and curtail the rights of those opposing the operation in the medical community.
 "We decided this would be a very appropriate action" to underscore Bishop Tonnos' concerns, Mr. Kennedy said.
 Bishop Tonnos oversees the Diocese of Hamilton, which includes Milton. Should the government task force recommendations be implemented, all physicians and nurses will be required to make abortion referrals, he said in the pastoral letter. Also, even Catholic social service agencies will be forced to make similar referrals.

 Father Peter Hundt is the chancellor for the Diocese and a spokesperson for the Bishop. The task force proposals "go against democracy," he said.

 The chancellor added that while the nature of the display in Milton was Father Talbot's decision, the Diocese will "definitely not" reprimand him for it.
 "To kill is wrong," Father Hundt said. "To kill an innocent is doubly wrong."
