Champion, Post Office in court

plication for judicial review in the Federal Court of Canada.

Management of The Canadian Champion and other Metroland newspapers say Canada Post has exceeded its statutory jurisdiction and exploited its access to locked apartment mailboxes to acquire an unlawful monopoly over the delivery of unaddressed flyers to these mailboxes.

In documents filed with the Federal Court, Metroland argues Canada Post's self-proclaimed monopoly is not sanctioned under its legislated mandate, which gives Canada Post a monopoly only for the delivery of letters.

The application states that Canada Post deliberately uses this unlawful monopoly to gain an unfair advantage over the Canadian Champion, its sister Metroland community newspapers and co-applicants.

"Canada Post's exploitation of its access to locked mailboxes provides them with an unlawful advantage over private-sector companies," said John Baxter, president and chief executive officer of Metroland.

"Their self-proclaimed monopoly denies the Canadian Champion and other distributors equal access to locked apartment mailboxes, while they abuse their mandate to facilitate their own financial gains," Mr. Baxter added.

"Such unwarranted extension of the Canada Post mandate has already cost Metroland newspapers and our co-applicants millions of dollars in lost business," he continued.
