

MacIsaac takes Greenaway's spot on Halton Council

Burlington alderman Robert MacIsaac is apparently approaching his new job as a regional councillor with quiet confidence. The 31-year-old Aldershot lawyer sat quietly through his first meeting of Halton regional council last week, after being sworn in during a brief ceremony prior to the meeting. "I'm confident that with my experience on local council I will hit the bricks running. My approach is to watch, listen and learn," said Mr. MacIsaac, who brought along wife Anne, 19-month-old daughter Sarah and father Arch to witness the swearing-in ceremony. Mr. MacIsaac, who takes over from Doug Greenaway, who resigned because of growing business commitments in the United States, was presented a small gift by regional chairman Peter Pomeroy at the meeting.

Mr. MacIsaac smiled during some good-natured ribbing from Mr. Pomeroy. "I wanted to see how perfectly Rob followed orders. I'm glad he was as subservient during the meeting as I had instructed him to be," Mr. Pomeroy joked. Mr. MacIsaac is the first to admit his political style is in stark contrast to that of his predecessor, known for his outspoken and controversial stances on regional issues. "I think (Burlington) city council has gotten to know me. They know what to expect from me. I'm not flashy," he said. Burlington council appointed Mr. MacIsaac — a Burlington city alderman — to replace Mr. Greenaway. Council chose Mr. MacIsaac over Ray Rivers, who was runner-up to Mr. Greenaway in the last municipal election.
