 Myra Sumner, a crossing guard at Wilson Drive and Woodward Avenue, is loved by students. The Milton woman recently won a Service Recognition Award from the Halton Safety Council and Halton Regional Police Service.

On coldest days, Myra was there

The Champion

The cold froze Myra Sumner's face three times in a week, but it wasn't enough to keep her away.

The longtime school crossing guard quit her job six years ago when she couldn't stand the freezing temperatures, but came back four days later.

"I missed the children," she says. "I was depressed. I'd go for a walk to see the kids."

The Maple Avenue woman's dedication to the job and her popularity among children recently won her a Service Recognition Award from the Halton Region Safety Council and Halton Regional Police.

She has now been on the job for more than 15 years, currently crossing Robert Baldwin and St. Peter's schoolchildren at Woodward Avenue and Wilson Drive.

Mrs. Sumner and four other Milton's own were presented with at the Muddy Duck banquet on Thursday night. Local winners also included student Jamie Jaysman, volunteers Dana Uhrig and Lois Oatma and Constable Sally-Anne Collins.

Thirteen other recipients from elsewhere in the region were honoured well. The awards recognize outstanding contributions to safety, or having performed or attempted a life-saving act.

Known simply to schoolchildren as Myra, Mrs. Sumner says she and the kids enjoy mutual respect.

"The students that cross today are our future," she says. "I respect them and they respect me."

Outside another Milton elementary school, a girl performs a similar task. A student of Sam Sherratt School on Laurier Avenue, Jamie is captain of the School Safety Patrol Program.

The Service Recognition Award winner is seen regularly at her crossing, even on the coldest days, says Susan Robertson, vice-chairperson of the Halton Region Safety Council.
