Regional reaction to budget muted

Ted Chudleigh
 Halton North MPP

By BRAD REAUME

The Champion

The provincial government did what they said they would do Tuesday, and announced a program to cut provincial income tax by 30.2 per cent over three years. It is the first time a provincial government has issued a tax cut in a generation.

"It's a fulfillment of a number of promises," said Halton North MPP Ted Chudleigh. "All the things taken together, it should create the environment where 725,000 new jobs can be created. Jobs that depend on tax dollars don't have as big an impact on the economy as private sector jobs."

In addition to the promised tax cut, the government issued no new spending cuts, they lowered health taxes on business, they increased child care spending by $200 million, issued a land transfer tax refund to first time, new home buyers, cut taxes on horse racing bets and set up charitable funds for various institutions.

Comments from some local politicians suggest the Ontario Opportunities Fund, which will be applied to the province's outstanding debt, is a purely political measure aimed at critics of the province's austerity program who claimed they did not want the tax cut.

Mr. Chudleigh called the budget "almost a yawn" because there
