

Chefs, homeowners prefer cooking with natural gas

More people prefer cooking with efficient, economical natural gas today than ever before, according to the American Gas Association.

Like six out of seven professional chefs, today's consumers prefer natural gas ranges because they provide even heat, precise temperature control and instant "on" and "off."

Natural gas ranges also cost less to operate. The estimated annual operating cost for an efficient natural gas range is about one-half the cost of operating an electric range, according to U.S. Department of Energy statistics.

Instead of the traditional standing pilot light, new gas ranges have pilot-less ignition systems that use an electric current to light a burner. Eliminating the pilot light saves up to 50 percent on energy costs and reduces excess heat in the kitchen, A.G.A. says.

New gas ranges also have options such as black or white glass doors and cooktops, automatic re-ignition, self-cleaning systems, sealed burners for easier cleaning, five-burner designs, computerized controls and continuous grates that enable a cook to slide pots from burner to burner without tipping. Some models also have a modular design that allows the cook to interchange griddle, grill and burner components.

Another popular new feature is a fifth burner designed especially for low-heat cooking. Perfect for melting butter, cheese or chocolate without scorching, or for simmering soups or sauces, this special burner also will automatically restart if the flame goes out—and at exactly the level at which it was previously set.

Self-cleaning natural gas wall ovens, which now offer high-efficiency operation in a double-oven configuration, are another new development, as is the "down-draft" cooktop, designed for kitchen islands with no overhead vents.
