

Chance for teen moms

The Halton Board of Education is offering young mothers and pregnant teens the opportunity to earn high school credits through an Adult and Continuing Education program called Teen Education and Motherhood (TEAM).

Teen moms can attend school five afternoons a week while their children are cared for on site.

The Milton program runs weekdays from 1-4 p.m. in the Tinkerbell Nursery area on the E.C. Drury campus. The program is also available in Burlington, Oakville and Georgetown. Qualified teachers assist students working on individualized programs.

For more information or registration call the Lockhart Educational Centre at 333-3499, or call Barb Saxby at 878-0568.

New plan for chlorine fight

Halton wants to use Milton for pilot project

By BRAD REAUME
The Champion

Halton Region wants the Ministry of Environment and Energy (MOEE) to use Milton in a pilot project on stand-by chlorination systems.

The measure was the result of a closed door discussion at Tuesday's regional health and social services committee and must pass next week's full council meeting. All parties involved are concerned with potential liability surrounding Milton's request for an exemption from chlorination.

In addition, the committee directed Halton Chair Joyce Savoline to respond to a letter from the province which outlined a confusing set of requirements necessary to halt chlorination. Many of the requirements have been met, others need clarification from the province.

Milton's water has been chlorinated at low levels for about a year. Provincial standards were only brought to Milton when MOEE officials became aware of the lack of chlorine while conducting a routine inspection of equipment repairs. Chlorine kills bacteria in water and is used throughout the world in water treatment.

Colin Best, Milton's representative at the health and social services committee, said he forwarded Milton Councillor Barry Lee's suggestion for the pilot project.

"The Derry Road (water) line has been fixed and virtually the whole system has been upgraded," said

Mr. Best. "The problems we've had have always been in the lines. The source water has always had zero readings (for contaminants)."

Mr. Best said the problem is really a philosophical one between those who support chlorination and those who are wary of the chemical's effects.

"We had no chlorination for 106 years and we never had an (illness) outbreak. We were always within the limits of the previous guidelines," said Mr. Best. "There is no comparable baseline for study so we are suggesting Milton be used as the base."

The few episodes of contamination in Milton have produced readings below 10 parts per billion. However, more stringent guidelines introduced a few years ago put Milton contaminant levels into what is now considered the danger zone.

According to Mr. Best it is the changed guidelines which produced the problem of additional MOEE scrutiny for Milton.

"I have gotten more than two dozen phone calls from people who've had reactions to the chlorine in the last year," said Mr. Best, who added other local councillors have received numerous calls as well. "There are five families I know of who moved to Milton because there was no chlorine in the water."

The measure was not without its opponents, according to Mr. Best. The vote was 4-2 with Burlington Mayor Walter Mulkeiwich and Burlington Councillor Bob Wood voting against. Mr. Best said he could understand their reluctance.

"I have gotten more than two dozen phone calls from people who've had reactions to the chlorine in the last year."
