Stay Cozy Without Spending a Fortune

A leading manufacturer of home controls and indoor air-quality products, Honeywell Inc., recommends four things you can do to control heating costs. In fact, you can get the equivalent of one month of free heat this winter when you:

1. Replace or wash the furnace filter monthly. It's cheap, it's easy, and it helps protect expensive heating and cooling equipment while extending equipment life. A dirty air filter restricts the air flowing through your home's heating system, causing your furnace to work harder and burn more energy to maintain a comfortable temperature.

Added strain on the heating unit can take its toll. Nine out of 10 mechanical breakdowns of heating and cooling systems are caused by dirt, dust, lint or soot.

2. Advance to a better air cleaner. If you use a standard, disposable furnace filter, switch to a high-efficiency furnace filter. If you already have a high-efficiency filter, invest in an air cleaner.

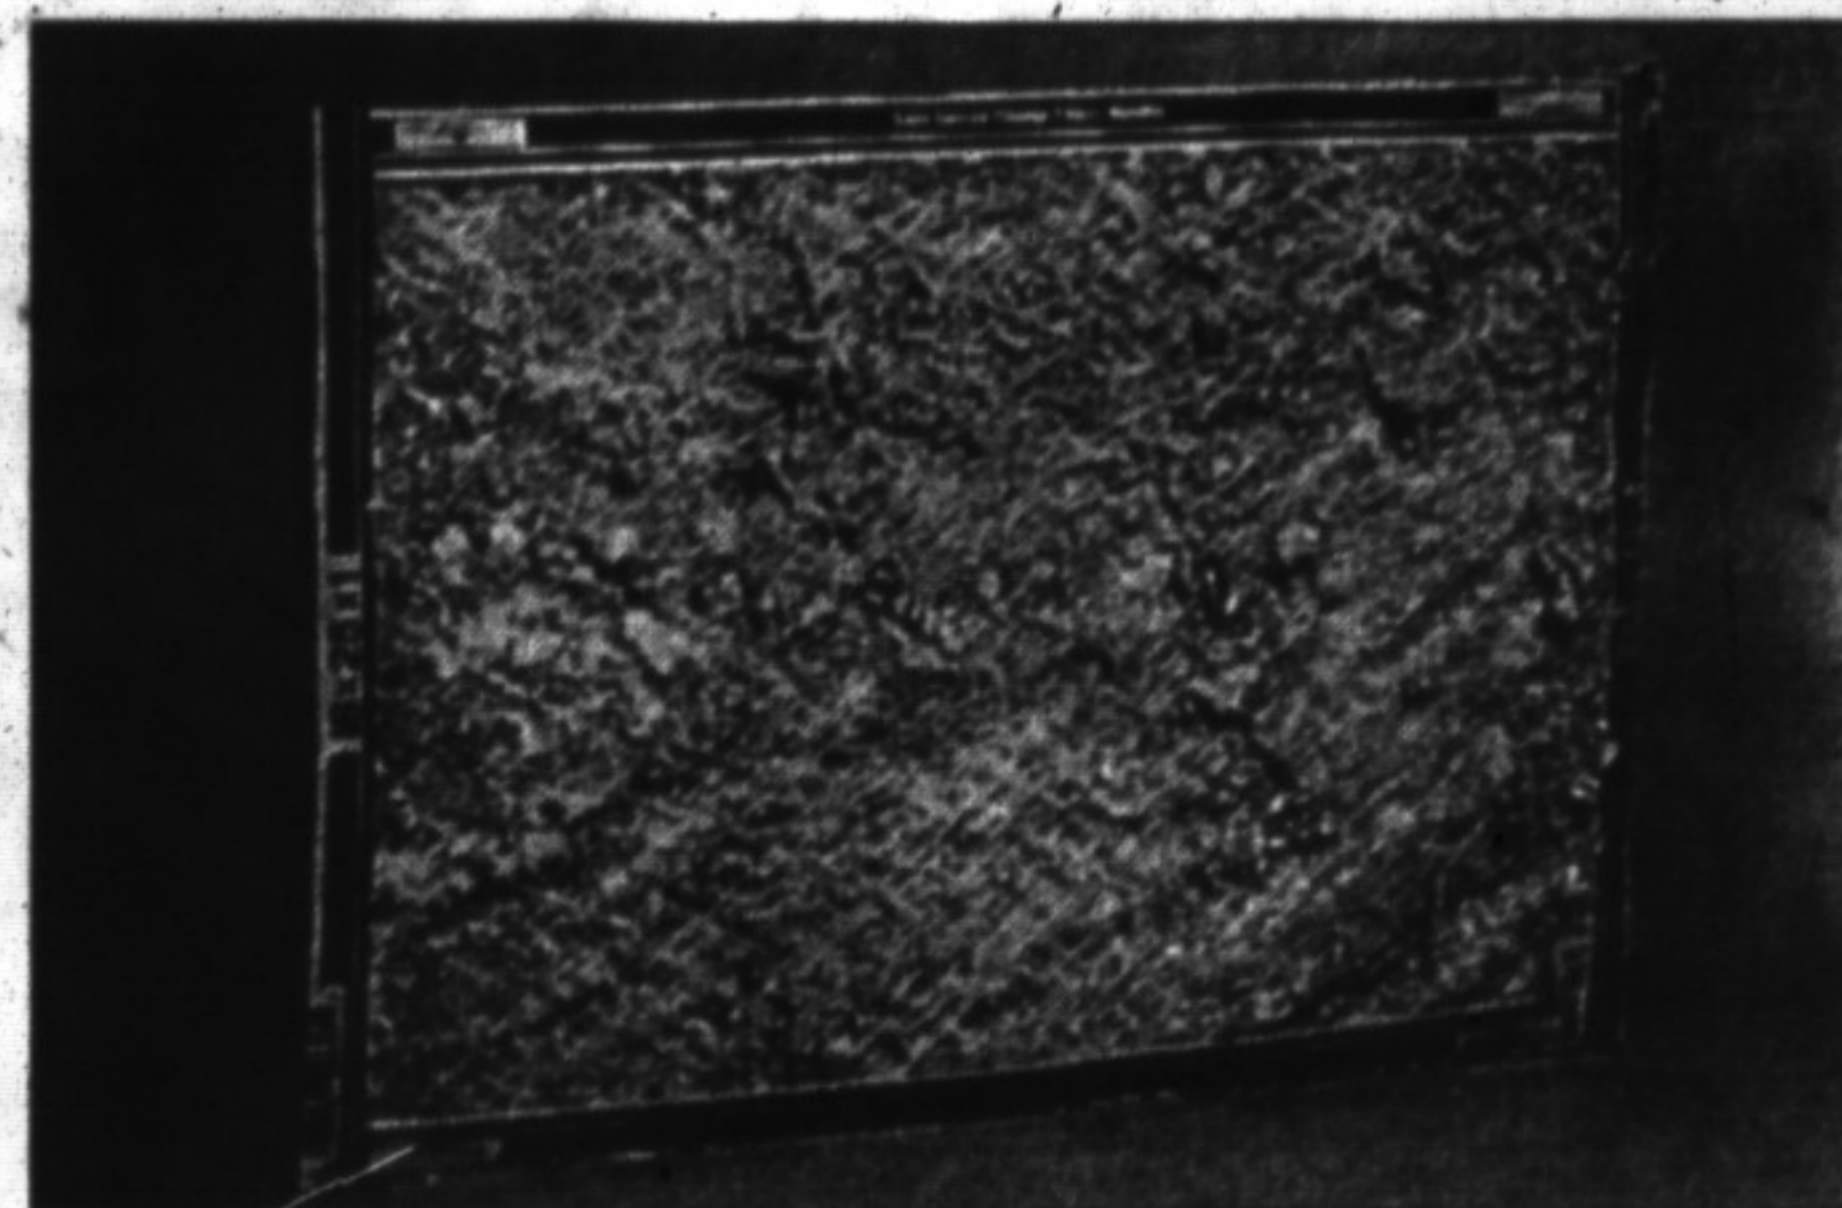

Two types of whole-house air cleaners are available.

- Whole-house electronic air cleaners are the best, removing up to 95 percent of indoor air pollutants, including those as small as bacteria and some viruses.

- Whole-house media air cleaners are good solutions for budget-conscious homeowners.

Portable room air cleaners are ideal for homes without forced-air heating or for those homeowners who want to augment the cleaning power of a whole-house air cleaner. 3. Have your heating and cooling equipment professionally checked and cleaned once a year. Have the heating coils cleaned. In just two years, dust on heating coils can rob performance by as much as 10 percent to 15 percent.

4. Replace an ordinary thermostat with a programmable thermostat. A programmable thermostat can save up to 30 percent on energy costs by turning down the heat when you're sleeping or away from home. With simple, push-button programming, you set the times and temperatures to fit your schedule.

Take the time to change or wash the air filter in your furnace, advises Honeywell Inc., a leading manufacturer of home controls and indoor air-quality products. A dirty filter restricts the airflow, forcing your furnace to work harder and use more energy. That costs you more money and aggravates allergies by allowing dust and other pollutants to build up.
