

The legal aspects of home buying worth paying for a lawyer

Since buying or selling a home is a complex legal transaction, it's in your best interest to have someone with knowledge of the law working on your behalf.

It is not a good idea to act as your own lawyer or use the same lawyer as the other person in the transaction. You'll need advice from an objective person who will look after only your interests and depending on the complexities of the deal, lawyers charge anywhere from a few hundred dollars to $1,000 or more (including expenses) for the average real estate transaction.

A lawyer can be used to help you with the legal technicalities involved in closing a deal, such as ensuring you have valid title to the property you're buying and making sure it is correctly described in all documents.

He or she should look over the offer to purchase and change it in any way to reflect your needs.

For example, you may want to make the offer to buy conditional, by including a clause stating you will buy the house provided you can arrange mortgage financing.

Before the sale closes, your lawyer will have a number of important jobs to do for you. He or she will 'search the title' to make sure no one
