

It takes a lot to print agendas

It may not seem like a big-ticket item, but printing and delivery agendas for regional council costs a sizeable amount.

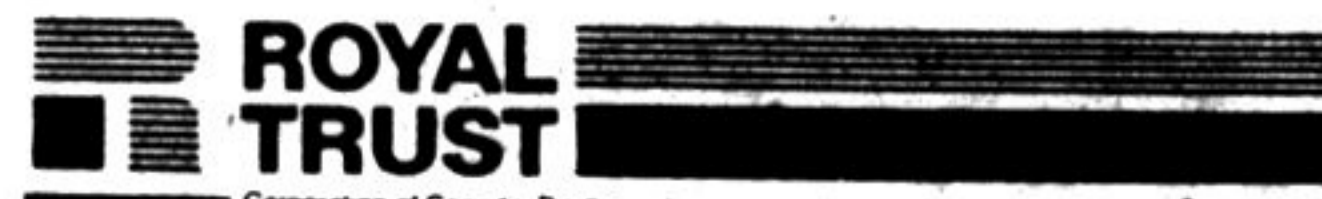

In a report issued to Halton's regional administration and finance committee recently, it was noted the cost of printing council/committee agendas for the first quarter was $10,603; while the courier cost for the quarter was $906.26.

In the second quarter printing costs were $8,089 and the courier cost $1,085.

The reason the printing cost is less is because the agendas are smaller. The reason for the increase in the courier was a five per cent increase paid to the courier for delivery.

The courier, by the way, makes $13.91 per hour for a "special run" apart from the normal flat rate charged for delivery to members of council.
