

Good driving habits save money

Knight Rider may have a computerized car but most of us need a little human input.

By simply changing a few driving habits, car owners can cut fuel consumption by 10 per cent. That could amount to a total saving of over a billion litres of gas and diesel fuel annually in Ontario alone.

A lot of myths have fallen by the wayside since fuel conservation has become part of the modern approach to driving. For example, drivers used to idle their cars to warm them up before moving, particularly in cold weather. Now motorists are finding that, even a -20 degrees C, most cars only require 15-30 seconds of idling before being driven off gently. On warmer days, cars need no idling at all.

Another common belief was that leaving a car idling during short stops would use less fuel than turning it off and starting it again when the stop was over. It is now widely recognized that 10 seconds of idling uses more fuel than restarting the engine.

Drivers are also finding that jackrabbit starts are best avoided because they increase fuel consumption. A smooth, steady acceleration uses less fuel and makes for a more comfortable ride.

Like the accelerator, the brake pedal should be used slowly and evenly. Drivers can cut back on use of the brake by anticipating stops.
