Bronte St. sewer project almost dies at Halton

Halton has decided to go ahead and up its debenture load by $270,000 in order to complete some important public works projects, but this decision did not come before it seemed the spending might be deferred.

The problem arose earlier this year when the public works department at the region, in consultation with the area municipalities noted a number of projects needing to be completed were discovered.

Halton had set its debentured rate on Dec. 7, 1983. The new works, which the region pays a portion, meant another $270,000 would have to be added to the debenture load.

Last week at region's council, Burlington councillor Joan Little said she was opposed to adding more money to the debenture etc, particularly after everything had been settled.

She said she had looked at the list of projects and said she knew of some in Burlington which could be deferred for a year.

Mrs. Little then carried that to her argument that the entire list of works projects should go back to staff and a report priorizing them would be prepared and returned to council for debate.

This did not sit too well with Milton mayor, Gord Krantz, who said Milton had only one project but was for the storm sewer which is part of the Bronte Rd. reconstruction project. Mr. Krantz said it would be impossible for the region to decide to hold back money for the project "because I believe we are opening tenders on that next week."

Mr. Krantz said the tenders were already coming in and it would be impossible for Halton to change its mind about financial cooperation in the project.

Burlington mayor Roly Bird, however, supported Mrs. Little in sending all the projects back for study saying "let's not be so parochial around this table."
