Mayor Gord Krantz earned $79,989 in salaries, benefits and expenses last year while other members of Milton town council earned between $30,000 and $38,000.

The salaries and annual expenses paid to council members and local boards were made public in a report, which was received by town council Monday night.

Krantz, who has served as mayor for the last 32 years and has been on council since 1965, received $69,954 in salary, $2,559 in benefits, $1,830 in professional development and $5,646 in car mileage in 2012. He also earned $49,047 in salary and benefits, conference expenses and car mileage for sitting on Halton regional council.

The majority of councillors earned a base salary of about $28,967 with the exception of Ward 6 Councillor Mike Cluett and Local and Regional Councillor Tony Lambert.

Cluett earned a base salary of about $26,495 because he hasn't accepted any pay increases during his term, while Lambert earned a base salary of $27,024 because he declined last year's pay increase of about 6.3 per cent. With benefits and professional development factored in, Cluett earned $32,777 while Lambert earned $30,480, which is also the least among his council counterparts.

Ward 5 Councillor Arnold Huffman was the biggest earner at a total of $37,854 — $28,967 in salary, $2990 in benefits and $5,897 in professional development.

At the regional level, Councillor Colin Best earned $57,638 in salary and benefits, conference expenses and car mileage while Lambert, who also sits on regional council, totaled $52,212 in salary and expenses.

Last year, council approved a pay increase of about 19.5 per cent for the mayor and 18.9 per cent for councillors, which is being phased in from 2012 to 2014. It's based on recommendations of a citizen compensation committee that reviewed the earnings of the mayor and councillors to ensure their wages are in line with comparable municipalities.
