Hadfield to add author to his resumé

So much for idle retirement. Having recently announced his retirement from the Canadian Space Agency, native Miltonian and renowned astronaut Chris Hadfield is now writing a book that will be published in the fall.

The autobiographic book — An Astronaut's Guide to Life on Earth — has a release date of October 29, Random House Canada stated in a recent media announcement.

"Chris has a delightful capacity to bring home the fascinating details of what it takes to be an astronaut and what it's like to live in micro-gravity, and then to dig deeper into all the surprising training and lessons learned that help him, and the whole astronaut corps, do the impossible as if it's another day at work," Knopf Random Canada Publishing Group publisher Anne Collins said in the announcement. "On top of that, he might be the best witness we've ever had to the wonders of space, the fragility and beauty of our planet and the necessity to keep pushing the envelope of space exploration."

Hadfield should have plenty of intriguing material to fill a book. He has three space flights under his belt and this past spring became the first Canadian to command the International Space Station (ISS).

During that tenure he amassed more than one million Twitter followers, due to his posting thousands of spectacular photos of Earth from his unique vantage point.

The announcement of his book deal came just a day after he gave a Canada Day performance at Ottawa's Parliament Hill, playing his song 'Is Somebody Singing' — recorded while he was aboard the ISS — with co-writer Ed Robertson of the Bare-naked Ladies.
