Alzheimer's Society to benefit from project

A&L... whenever she has a chance. It's about her personal relationship with her father, who has a rare form of dementia called frontal temporal dementia, which leaves him unable to care for himself. She said she was very close to her father when she was growing up. Money raised by that project will go to the Alzheimer's Society of Canada, she said. She's also part of Toronto's Medieval Times Dinner and Tournament, acting as Princess Catalina. And, when she's at home, she said she dresses up as a princess for kids' birthday parties. Her "side-job," Once Upon a Party, sees her wear various costumes to entertain children at their parties. King invites people to visit her Facebook page at Alysa C. King, or follow her on Twitter @alysaking, or go to www.alysaking.com to keep up to date on her career. Julie Slack can be reached at jslack@miltoncanadianchampion.com or on Twitter @miltonmusing.
