Veal looks to set new world record

A member of the Canadian National Cycling Team will attempt to break a world record and a national record at the velodrome this week. Ed Veal, 38-year-old cyclist from Barrie, will try his luck at setting a new world record for the 'best hour performance' in the masters men's 35 to 39 cyclist group, and the 'Canadian hour record' at the Mattamy National Cycling Centre tomorrow (Friday).

"It's scary to a lot of people, scary to myself," said Veal. "You've got to be a little crazy..." Last year, Veal broke Canadian records for the 4,000-metre team pursuit and individual pursuit and it was these feats that inspired him to go for the world record. The current 'best hour performance' record was set in 2011 by Australian cyclist Jayson Austin, at 48.31 km in one hour, while the Canadian hour record of 45.95 km is held by Mike Nash, set in 2011. "I am confident I am going to set a world record."
