HDSB develops video series on math strategies for parents

By Tim Whitnell
METROLAND WEST MEDIA GROUP

It's an important numbers game. The Halton District School Board is producing a three-part video series to show parents and guardians how their kids' schools engage elementary and secondary students in math instruction.

The educational videos are in response to the Ontario Ministry of Education's release of the Renewed Math Strategy.

The first video in the series is called Beyond The Numbers: Understanding the Renewed Math Strategy. It outlines mathematics in the board, as well as the objectives of the remaining videos.

The second part, to be released in late May, will show "math instruction in action and innovative teaching in the classroom," states a board press release.

The third and final video, to be released in September, will provide supports, resources and practical ideas for parents and guardians to help them support math instruction at home.

In the board's first video, which is just under five minutes long, it notes that everyday activities like home budgeting, cooking and planning a trip all include aspects of math.

"In fact, it's rare to find an occupation that doesn't use math in some way, Tina Salmini, a Halton public board Superintendent of
