AN ESSAY. Delivered before a crowded audience in the hall of the Mechanics' Institute, Ottawa, on the evening of the 16th of Jan., 1866, by John Morphy, Esq., of the Crown Lands Department.

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I feel proud of the position I occupy this evening, having long since been invited to deliver an address on the social liquor drinking customs, I am not ashamed in the presence of this large and intelligent assembly to avow myself a teetotaler.

One of the best temperance meetings I have ever attended (as far as the speaking was concerned) was held in this hall on the evening after Christmas day last. The convincing arguments that put forth, cannot fail to have been shared, not only on those who have heard them, but on those with whom they have conversed on the subject; for my own part they have strengthened my resolve to resist the temptations of the social liquor.

When I was a lad in my native town in the Emerald Isle, many a shillelagh and pugilistic encounter I saw, the rising generation then, by the example of their seniors in such exertions, frequently put to the test of their courage by the use of the shillelagh.

My father, a man of a most excellent character, and of a most excellent disposition, was a teetotaler, and his example was followed by all his family, and by all his friends.
