ORATORY IN PARLIAMENT.

egregiously stupid person once asked Lord Brougham. "Lord Derby is the second," was the self-conscious reply. The querist had, no doubt, forgotten the Henry Brougham (chiefly heard in later days at Social Science Congresses) had once, as the defender of Queen Caroline and the champion of Parlian entary Reform and Negro Emancipation, Rev. J. Moultrie, author of the weli-known lines, made all England ring with his fame. Now, however, though Derby certainly does not stand second as an orator even to Lord Brougham, in the general opinion of Englishmen, it is not at all so clear that the leader of the Tories is the first orator in the country. The Rupert of debate," whose headlong charges in the Commons sometimes threw the Liberal ranks into confusion, suffers in the Lords not only from the influences of time, which has taken from the timbre of his once so ringing tones, but has also been gradually allowing some of his most remarkable powers to rust from disuse, partly because the atmosphere of the House of Lords is too cool for his native fire, and partly because he never finds in it a forman worthy of his steel. To extinguish pretentious Duke of Argyle by a felicetous anecdote, or to banter an amiable Lord Granville, whom the most venemous of opponents could scarcely wish to wound, or to tease Lord Russell by dle," is only to bring into play some of the minor eloquence, limited perhaps in its range, but startling and exciting in its power, for which the Lord Scanley of a former day was Three suns rose; three suns set; onward still, onso distinguished. But it is in the more popular branch in the Legi-lature that the gift of oratory can be exercised with most facility requently called forth. Thither, therefore, must we turn to find the men whose voices in the days we live in oftenist stir the heart of the country to its lowest depths, and whose words, faithfully recorded and carried to every corner of their own land and of the world, keep alive in the hearts of our people a traditional pride in their great representa-Then rose a shout, "The hull with the storm-wave tive assembly, and make its proceedings an object of unfailing interest and emulous imptation amongst all civilized races "articulate speaking men."

Mr. Gladstone possesses the copia dicendi in an eminent degree. His wealth of words is marvelous, and the unfaltering fluency with which they are poured forth. His ideas are hesion, and his general treatment of subjects may justly be called exhaustive. His divisions are sometimes a little too mechanical, and one cannot now hear of the regular of oak, which must upbear us;

But this subjectivity is also a source of weakness, when it leads him to propound what seem to him political or economical truths, with a dogmati-There hung those spirits brave over the yawning cal authority that will not brock correction or dissent. But, nevertheless, we do not consider his Budget speeches, as a rule, the best of his oratorical efforts; and the "City men" who sit them out, in order to have the first and fullest exposition of his intended policy, generally complain of weariness at the close. They were more satisfied, on the whole, with Sir George Lewis, wretched speaker as he was; but Mr. Goschen, whenever in the fullness of time he becomes Mr. Gladstone's Chancellor of the Exchequer, will be just the man for them. Mr. Gladstone may be called we think, the Tennyson of finance; for he brings to his public expositions of it not only the powers of his reason, but also the resources of his imagination, and clothes them with a beauty of diction and richness of illustration which men delight to hear. Still it is not the less true that a simpler treatment would generally be more effective, that the times developed with too much diffuseness, and that the artist often prevails over the statesman in these elaborate efforts. Mr. Gladstone's delivery is very good. His voice if not powerful, is clear and judiciously modulated, his enunciation distinct, though natural and unaffected, and his gesture, though absurd to think, and that there are many principles of public policy which he advocates from conviction, is very probable. But the appearance of hesitation and effort with which he often speaks gives a disintere-ted and impartial auditor the impression that his words are not so much the signs of his inward ideas, as attempts, sometimes painful and not quite successful, to give expression to opinions that are struggling for utterance in the minds of others; that he is speaking not exactly what he thinks, but rather what others may like to hear, or may wish them to believe. We have no doubt, however, that this heaitation is often affected, and we have remarked it at times when it seemed carefully designed to give more effect There are several young Southerners in Paris to keen invective or biting sarcasm.
