The following is general Sweeney's "card" referred to, in the telegraphic despatches of Friday last. It will be seen that among other qualities, inseparable from true greatness the "general" affects a large stock of the virtue of humility. He not only resigned the office of Secretary of War, but actually refused to be "Commander in Chief of the Army in Ireland!" After that no wonder that he should also decline the onerous duty of attending "Fenian pic-nics, and other reunions," "In conequence of the numerous invitations which Gen. Sweeney is now receiving to attend Fenian Brotherhood, he wishes it to be understood that he resigned the position of Secretary of War at the Troy Congress, and declined Army of Ireland, which was tendered to him by that body. Being, therefore, no longer connected with the organization of the Fenian Brotherhood, he does not intend to take any
