And by what principle of fair play can a pub lie man be called upon "to contradict" the statements of a person whose veracity is even endorsed by the party who gives them during intermissions. The performance is to be currency? It is clear that by the general adoption of such a principle the press might be made the vehicles of the foulest and most quences of his evil deeds by the shelter of an assumed name. We object, in toto to ystem of pitting men, whether in a public or private capacity, in defence of their reputations, against anonymous scribblers, because the conditions of the contest are manifestly unfair; and we hold that the editors or publishers who open their columns for such a purose are justly amenable to public censure.

The protectionist doctrine threatens work its own cure in the United States. Yesterday we gave several extracts American papers relative to the general tagnation of business, the fall in prices, and the expectation of a speedy and general crash in the commercial circles. It is, of course, very difficult to trace all the causes leading say that the highly artificial character of the wrought system of protection. Like the tempted to make fortunes by trading in corner lots, the protectionists are beginning to out that when every class secures the benefit

The system which I shall discuss in this article is known as the five-year or five-field-system. The order adopted in this system is as follows: 1, corn; 2, oats, 3;

wheat a 4, grass for hay; 5, potatoes, This system gives corn, wheat and oats every five years. Taking this as a standard we will make such changes as circumstances demand. By this system corn will come to soft. Sorghum or potatoes, early or late, may take the place of corn, if it is desired to raise these articles. Spring wheat, flax, barley peas, or early potatoes, may be raised instead of oats. Any crop which will come off the ground by the last of August, may be put in instead of oats. - After oats are off, the ground a Southern trip, states that almost every north- thought of the deadly hug he might give were wheat or rye, and seeded with timothy after is thoroughly ploughed and sown with winter The next spring, in March, clover seed
