This is an iron deposit of vast extent, covering over one hundred acres, comprising both hematite and magnetic ore of great richness, and almost inexhaustible in quantity .- It rises about one hundred feet above the level of the surrounding country, and from its proximity to the water offers unrivalled facilities for successful working. Wharf accommodation could be constructed at a very trifling cost, as the ore could almost be loaded from the beach. The surrounding country offers few inducements for farming "Waverly Mine." Come thou who in my secret heart hath been The veiled companion of my lonely ways, Thou who the halls of memory hath seen Lit up by many bright but fleeting rays. Come mourn with me upon the dreary void, Which Death has made in my afflicted heart,

Assignee for the Estate of COLL McDONELL Whose coward hand each kindred tie destroyed. And tore each golden wreath of hope apart. For she is dead, the beautiful, the bright, Whose kindred were all good and lovely things; From weary earth her soul hath taken flight To heaven, watted upon angel wings. Come then, we will not mourn for one at rest,

From many sorrows haply she is free: The young who die, in dying are more blest, Than those who live for deeper misery. She did not see how love grows faint and cold, Nor mark caresses turn to frowns of hate; She did not see the things that make men old,

Not view the wrecks upon the shore of fate. The sweet young love that nestled in her heart ardice, is now to be placed on trial for incom-Had not yet raised its gaudy wings to fly; She did not feel her purity depart,
