"They have done their best and their worst, these people and have shown some power of mischief, along with a still greater power of making themselves and their cause ridiculous." . This was the prevailing opinion among those with whom body knew that when the Fenians rose they place would be defeated: but few even of those who most despised the Fenian movement, thought that the rising would be so very contemptible as it has proved in the neighborhood of Dublin. I had no time to visit the prisoners, but am told that they are mostly lads of from 17 to 18 and upwards-apprentices, shop assistants, clerks, and a dirty, ragged following, with which a soldier would be 10th to march through Coventry, much less Dublin.
