and the management of the Provincial National Debt, will be found to be too much for any one Minister, and it is to be hoped that the responsibility will be so divided as to assign to individual members of the Cabinet such a share of departmental government, and such a share only, as they will be able to account for to Parliament and their colleagues.

Reference has been made to the smallness of the number of heads of Departments in Washington, as an argument why we should have but a small number of Ministers under the new Constitution, but it is not at all in point. The Executive officers at Washington are placed in an entirely different position from those in this country, and any argument drawn from the American system must signify fail to carry conviction to the mind of any one who reflects upon the fact that Parliament is, in this country, the chief tribunal for the testing of ministerial conduct, whereas in the United States, the test of Executive action rests with the decision of the Supreme Court. With the British system, the responsible parliamentary government the individual accountability of Ministers must ever remain a distinct feature, but the perfection of that system will be always impaired wherever the political chief may safely transfer responsibility from his own shoulders to those of the Department or deputy leader. We hope that in the Government about to be formed for the Dominion of Canada, Ministers will be assigned only a reasonable amount of duty, and that they will be prepared to give to Parliament a personal account of all that transpires in their respective departments, for by no other system can we hope for that complete and economical administration of the new Constitution which it is eminently desirable to secure.

The departmental system has, to a considerable extent, not only in Canada, but in every other country, been left to the responsibility of the administration of their respective departments, too much in the hands of their respective deputies, but we hope that under the new Constitution this abuse will be so far corrected as to leave individual Ministers personally accountable to Parliament and the country for all that takes place within their departments. We could instance several cases of the assumption of power by the irresponsible deputy heads, which could be at once recognized as utterly at variance with the theory of responsibility implied in our Constitution; but as the old times are about to pass away, we content ourselves for the present with merely saying that the Ministers of the new Dominion should have no more departmental work assigned to them than they can individually perform, and that the departments to be created will be sufficiently numerous to give a fair guarantee for the proper discharge of the public business.

THE THEATRE.—The great sensational and domestic drama entitled "Madeline, or the Foundling of Paris" was put on the boards at the Theatre last night for the first time in its history. The acting was quite equal to that of any other play which we have seen in this city, and the whole was well received.

ANOTHER COMMENT ON THE "CITIZENS' GAZETTE" MANU.—A number of our correspondents are anxious to know, and, at the same time, displaying their ignorance, as to why they are to form the "Citizens' Gazette" Cabinet. The most reasonable explanation, however, about these proposals, is that although each list of names is always said to be a copy of the list of names, it is not the same list, but a list of names which are to be used in the most trustworthy manner.

A ROMANTIC STORY OF BURIED TREASURE.

A San Francisco paper, noticing the formation in that city of the "South Pacific Protection Company," (the name of which is a mystery), gives the following romantic history of the buried treasure which this company seeks to recover.

The stated object of the company is to recover buried treasure in Coos Bay—that is, to attempt to recover, provided the treasure is there, the gold which was buried in the gold mine of Coos Bay, which was discovered by the late Captain James W. Wadsworth, who was killed in the battle of Coos Bay, and whose body was buried in the gold mine. The treasure was buried in the gold mine, and was discovered by the late Captain James W. Wadsworth, who was killed in the battle of Coos Bay, and whose body was buried in the gold mine.

MR. DISRAELI FROM AN AMERICAN POINT OF VIEW.

The New York Times gives the following sketch of the leader of the House of Commons.

Whenever the career of Mr. Disraeli comes to be fairly narrated, it will prove to be one of the most instructive which the annals of public life in England have recorded. There has been a harder contest for power and influence than that which has distinguished the career of the present Chancellor of the Exchequer. There must have been times when Mr. Disraeli's indomitable spirit felt sorely tried, and when he has had to bear the brunt of the heaviest blows which have been dealt to any man in the House of Commons.

Mr. Disraeli's career is a remarkable one, and is full of interest. It is said that he was a man of great energy and determination, and that he was able to overcome all his opponents.
