Doubtless a period of calm reflection will succeed the heat of bar tle, and the local representatives of Nova Scotia will simply devote themselves in their own way to the administration of the affairs of the Province within the limits of the Constitution. Perhaps the Local Legislature may be ber of them very fond of changing quarters, shoulders of his companion, and manages to any injury to the man in charge. Though none regret more than we | 35. Majority for Simpson, 9. For the Local our disposal. It is very gracefully done, and do the temporary rejection of the advocates of Union at the polls in Nova Scotia, we have a firm conviction that the wisdom of their course will soon, be vindicated, and the Special to the Trees popular ingratitude atoned for.

Duning the past summer, and in fact since the question of Confederation came up in detail for discussion, it has occasionally been regretted, and sometimes even by those whose opinions are entitled to great respect, that the management of the Crown Lands, in all the provinces, had not been reserved for the gene ral government. Scarcely could a regret be more ill founded. Judging by the experience of the joint management of the Crown Lands of Upper and Lower Canada during the old Union, we think we are quite safe in affirming that no department of the Government gave such universal dissatisfaction. Reproaches came alike from the East and the West that due encouragement was not given to settlers, that the lands were locked up or sold to speculators, and that the colonization roads and free grants had proved lamentable failures. Sectional jealousies eternally warred against improvement in one part of the province lest an undue advantage might be secured over the other, and the general discontent was made apparent a few years ago by an almost universal demand, that the Crown Lands system should be en tirely changed.

The cession, if so it may be called, of the Crown Lands of each Province to the Gov ernment thereof, is not only defencible on the common ground which is held to discrim nate between the duties of the Local General Governments, but it seems a neces sary consequence to another provision of the Constitution, which gives to the Local Gov ernment the control of "property and civil rights." The titles to real estate, under this a number have gone to the scene of operaprovision, should certainly come from the Crown through the Local, and not through the General Government, otherwise they might be weighted with conditions or sub ject to exemptions or reservations that would conflict with the general policy of the Provincial Governments. Then, again, the administration of the Crown Lunds, though affecting generally the whole country, affects more particularly the Provinces in which they are situated, and we may reasonably as- Cinderella-in aid of the institution. sume that self interest and Provincial ambition will inspire the people of the several Provinces to pursue that policy in their re-
