The absorbing topic of the day being the probability of a European war, it was very natural that I should ask Count de Bismarck what he thought upon the subject. He reolied that he believed, almost without qualification, in peace, "Prussia," he said, " will never attack France; and France, when she has got over the startling surprise that a prospect of German unity has been to her, will speedily comprehend that such a consummaway menaces her national pride or her continental position. Meanwhile, our attitude is almost a passive one-we are threatening nobody, coercing nobody, not even persuading anybody. If Southern Germany gravitates towards us, be assured the gravitation is a natural one, not one brought about by mancuvres on our part. We shall not repulse our brothers if they come to us with open arms ; but we do not yearn for anybody's property, and can remain as we are for ten years or twenty, if Germany will let us. We have even held back where we could have precipitated agglomeration : we are content to be as we are; the pressure must come from those who feel the want of change." I inquired what impression the meeting at Salzburg had upon the Minister President, and whether the inferences and inventions of an excited journalism had had any effect upon him. "None whatever." he answered ; "what have thought and think of the Salzburg affair is embodied in my circular of the 7th : and neither I nor any other reasonable man believed in the feasibility of an Austro-French. alliance, nor feared its consequences, if effected, to Prussia. Austria cannot be the ally of France against Germany; it is the German element in her that is the good cement binding the bricks of her enormous house together. As to the amalgamation of the new Provinces with Prussia, and their ultimate reconcilia-00 tion with their new conditions of existence, Count de Bismarck seemed not only hopeful but confident of success. "In Hanover," he remarked, " we are going on as well as we can be. The intelligence and commercial elements of the Province are on our side-only the Ritterschaft and the dependents on the late Court are against us.
