The Hon. Joseph C. Carter, Speaker of the Senate, and the Hon. T. D. McGeer, arrived yesterday, as did also the following named representatives of Nova Scotia: the Hon. Mr. Archibald and the Hon. Mr. Dickie, Senators, and Hon. Stewart Campbell, M.P. The Hon. Mr. Miller, Senator, from the same Province, has also arrived.

The Parliament of Canada assembles to-morrow after the "long adjournment," and doubtless to-day's and to-morrow's trains will bring in large arrivals of the people's representatives.

Through the courtesy of the Parliament of the new Dominion has been despatched by the seven weeks' experience of last autumn the interest attaching to this second part of the Session is none the less important.

To-morrow the Legislature opens to face the practical work of harmonizing and consolidating the Union, a work which was only but begun in the former part of the Session, and part of that beginning was made with the distinct understanding that it would now undergo revision.

This revision has reference to the engrossing subject of the tariff, which has formed the staple of newspaper discussion almost since the adjournment. Other weighty matters of little less importance will also come up in due course, and we have full faith that the representatives of the people will approach their consideration with the single idea of realizing the great purpose for which the Colonies sought Union—the reproduction, on the American continent, of a British constitutional system of government.

The Ministers, we have every reason to believe, are fully prepared to meet the Legislature, and submit to its consideration measures of a practical character on the several subjects requiring legislative interference.

The Minnesota Legislature is waking up on the Northwest question. Like the doughy Governor of Maine, who saw in the Confederation of Canada and the Maritime Provinces a menace to the existence of republican institutions, the Minnesota Legislature have discovered that the transfer of the Northwest Territory to the Dominion of Canada without the consent of the American citizens therein residing, would be "an unwarrantable interference with the principle of self-government" and in the very next breath these gentry "would rejoice to be assured that the cession of Northwest 'British America to the United States' is regarded as satisfactory basis of a treaty by Great Britain and Canada; there is a coolness which is almost in excess of impudence in these propositions. The transfer of the Territory to Canada would be an unpardonable act to be commended and rejoiced at. There is a frankness in the way of treating the British residents of the Northwest which is refreshing. The British residents of the Northwest might be handled by 'our leave,' but the few Yankee trappers, traders, and speculators, who make their money there, are in order 'to take a good 'thing of it,' must be consulted ere Great Britain dare to transfer the right of exercising municipal jurisdiction over this territory to the principal Government upon this Continent.

The following are the resolutions under consideration, if not already passed:— 1. That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to confirm, by requisite legislation, the annexation of Alaska to the United States.

2. That we regret to be informed of a purpose to transfer the Territories between Minnesota and Alaska to the Dominion of Canada by an order in Council, at London, without the consent of the people of the Territories, and the settlers upon the sources of the Saskatchewan river, who largely consist of emigrants from the United States, and we respectfully urge that the President and Congress of the United States shall represent to the Government of Great Britain that such action will be an unwarrantable interference with the principle of self-government, and cannot be regarded with indifference by the people of the United States.

3. That the Legislature of Minnesota would rejoice to be assured that the cession of Northwest British America to the United States, accompanied by the construction of a Northern Pacific Railroad, as proposed by Great Britain and Canada as satisfactory provisions of a treaty, which shall remove all grounds of controversy between the respective countries.

With the first we have no occasion to quarrel, though we may, perhaps, regret that the fortunes of the Crimean War did not relieve Russia of its Alaska barbers, and thereby deprive the Americans of the opportunity of making the purchase. Had it done so, "the territory" res between Minnesota and Alaska" might not have tempted the cupidity of our neighbors. The second may be passed over as a piece of harmless baseness and ridiculous assumption, for "American citizens" who may happen to be living in these territories have no right of franchise, so that were the question submitted to the people, they would either have to take the oath of allegiance, or so renounce their American citizenship, or say away from the pole.

The third resolution does deserve a little attention from the people of Canada, because it advances a proposition, and appeals directly to Great Britain and Canada for approval, and we ought not by silence, to give even the semblance of consent. Canadians will be very glad should Minnesota Legislators and Minnesotians generally, have cause to rejoice in their own progress and prosperity, and in the development of the resources of their own territory; but they will not consent to barter an inch of their territory which is honestly theirs, and the possession of which cannot possibly be a cause of controversy between them and their well disposed neighbors. The construction of a Northern Pacific Railroad is one of the great public works which the Dominion of Canada hopes some day to be able to undertake on its own account, and if for no other reason they would cling to the Northwest Territory to preserve the "right of way."

Canadians have long been accustomed to the "talk talk" of the American newspapers, but it is only of late years that the State Legislatures and Congress have begun to take an active part in annexation luncheon. BANK'S law is a formidable document in its way, but it did not do any harm, and may have pleased its author. The reciprocity but-stare-them-into-annexation policy did not do any mischief to a very important interest, especially in the Maritime Provinces; but as a set-off it has done, and continues to do, an immense good. It gave fresh impetus to the Coalescence movement; it has driven our commerce, in some respects, into new channels, and converted us into competitors with the United States in those markets which were before all their own, while we but played the part of auxiliaries at their service; and it has taught us a very important and most salutary lesson, of which, at one time, we stood very proud, of self-reliance. Governor Chamberlains, of Maine, fomented his wrath against the Confederation Act, but he did not stop its going into operation. The rumor that our Union would be called a "kingdom" shook the fabric of Republicanism to its very base, but fortunately it turned out all a mistake, and when the less pretentious and more indefinite "Dominion" was substituted, Congress again breathed freely. More recently the California State Legislature has had its set of resolutions on the desirability of annexing British Columbia, and now we have the Minnesota doing the same service by the Northwest Territory, but we presume these last efforts will end very much like the first. It is quite useless for our neighbors to bother their heads about our territory; let them, if they will, consider whether they can make more mutually advantageous arrangements concerning our trade; and we shall be only too willing to treat with them on fair terms.
