Several officers of the army, of a religious turn of mind, have recently been in the habit of spending a considerable porrtion of their leisuse hours in street preaching and other public religious exercises. This practice seems to have given offence to some prominent parties, by whom the attention of Horse Guards was called to the natter, and it is now stated that an order has been issued prohibiting officers in Her Majesty's service from preaching or otherwise exercising clerical functions. We can hardly believe that the military authorities have done any such improper thing, and we are sure Her Majesty the Queen will never give her sanction to such an order If an officer sees fit to spend a portion of his time in trying to improve the morals of his fellow creatures he is deserving of praise rather than blame.
