Church of Christ till the end of time, was the seventy-fourth Psalm It is said " a man was famous who litted his axe upon the thick trees." Solomon was " famous" who furnished the architectural plans of the Temple of God Hiram was " famous" who furnished the gold and the men to aid in the structure of that renowned temple; but the workingmen who hewed the cedars of Lebanon, and the raftsmen who carried these trees to Jerusalem, were

of our Lord's own day. The humble Nazarene -the meek and lowly Jesus-was a workingman; and where shall I go to find labour dignified and honored? Let me go to the workshop of Nazareth, and then with the mallet and chisel in hand, I find St. Joseph training to habits of industry and toil Him to whose precious blood I am indebted for the salvation of my poor sinful soul. Yes, Christ whom we preach as the only hope of perishing sinners, was a workingway. And he chose as the Ambassadors of His Gospel, not the mighty, not the learned, not the wisdom of this world, which is foolishness with God; no. no, but he chose the weak things of this world to confound the mighty. He sent forth workngmen to proclaim salvation through His passion and death. He chose the fishermen of liberias, and the tent-maker of Tarsus, to be his messengers of mercy to our ruined globe. If you enter the patent gallery in London. or Washington, or Paris, you will find that about 7 out of every eight patents which have been taken out for the purpose of lessening human labour, and promoting the ease and comfort of society, are taken out by workingmen, by men who, while toiling and drudging away at their daily labour for the support of their families were plying the energies of their minds to works of art and inventions which enriched themselves and benefited mankind.

These are the real benefiters of the race. The cause of philanthropy is not confined to the labours of a Howard, or Wilberforce. We find in men such as James Watt, Cyrus W. Field, George Stephenson, &c. &c., great philanthropists, men who shoot away beyond the ordinary spheres of our common manhood, and who lay the world under obligations to their genius. Yet the greatest men that ever lived have not been poets, nor philosophers, nor statesmen; no, they have gutta percha, is used instead of the ordinary been toiling workingmen. Let every man, therefore, labour to make his mark on the age and country in which he lives, and so live that when he dies the world may feel that it has lost something. What a miserable thought on a dying bed that a man has done no good, and that in fact the world will be well rid of him. I cannot close these remarks without one word.
