Any one who reads it may discover from "internal evidence" that the writer is one who has deeply studied the question undertakes to discuss; and any one may see, after a moment's reflection, that the subject broached is one requiring immediate and careful attention. The leading idea of his argument we take to be that the Capital is the property of the whole Dominion; that the citizens of Ottawa are neither capable, of their own means, nor ought they in fairness to be called upon, at their own expense, to make the Capital-what it ought to be-a source of pride to the whole population of the Dominion. All the Provinces have common terests here. Therefore Ottawa ought neither to be within the exclusive jurisdiction of one Province nor another: it ought, with a limited surrounding district, to be within the control of the Dominion Government and Legislature, to whom the Capital of the country of right belongs.

The argument at first sight seems conclude sive.
