A CLASSIC.

The following prologue was spoken at the opening of a play-house at Sidney, N. S. W. on Jan, 16, 1796, written by George Barrington, the notorious pickpocket, the actors being all convicts. The piece played on the occasion was "The Revenge," the afterpiece " The Hotel."

KEARNS & RYAN. From distant climes, o'er wide-spread seas we Though not with much eclat or beat of drum, True patriots all, for be it understood, We left our country for our country's good ; No private views disgraced our generous zeal, What urged our travels was our country's ANECDOTES OF THE PULPIT. Chalmers, like most great preachers, wrote but few sermons, but preached those over and over again, and never failed in fervour of delivery. "I heard him preach," says Dean Ramsay, " his beautiful sermon on the love of God," in the parish church of Haddington, and on my expressing my pleasure at having been present, he said, " I felt rather uncom-

who must have been hearing it for the fourth time." The death's head and bloody bones tyle of eloquence, as it has been irreverently termed, is less frequently heard from Store lately occupied by G. Fetherston & Co., next door to Magee & Russell's old store.

Preachers generally prefer, now-a-days, the gentle generally prefer, now-a-days, the gentle and persuasive to the alarming and threatening mode of sermonizing. Whitfield was a great master of the latter, and no one in modern times could frighten a sinuer more effectually with the "terrors of the Lord." He, however, was a lamb in comparison with some of the preaching lions of the Middle Ages. Wesley's sermons, unlike those of Whitfield's, read well. There is one against the extreme doctrine of election and reprobation which Southey has declared to be one of the " finest examples > ledged by al, whatever be the difference of opinion in regard to its force of argument, to be a brilliant example of powerful rhetoric. On the death of Princess Charlotte, when a wail of sorrow came from every pulpit in Great Britain, a celebrated divine startled his listeners with the text : "Take this cursed woman and bury her, for she is a King's daughter." This was not designed as an insult; far from it; for the preacher in his sermon took the view that if a character such as Jezebel was, should be buried with pomp simply because of royal birth, how much greater should be the respect shown to the memory of so virtuous a woman as of impassioned cloquence in the lan-the Princess Charlotte. To our American divine, Channing who is appreciated more in Europe even than in this country, we have this tribute from Dean Ramsay : " The style of Channing is carefully elaborated. He indicates the most refined and elegant taste. His sentiments express the purest emotions of Christian love and peace. His estimate of the Divine nature is lofty and emotional." The admiration of Channing as a writer is not confined to England. Count de Remusat, a distinguished French critic, has shown, in his masterly biography, that they are capable, even in France, of rising to the appreciation of the pure morals and refined dialectics of the American preacher.

MUSTAPHA GUNS. The methods of the celebrated Persian gun manufacturer, Mustapha, are still pursued by his successors. The muskets of that famous armorer are worth at present, it is said, from $400 to $500 apiece, though the modern rifles made on his system, can be bought from $40 to $80, day, are fired with a fuse. The infantry of Southern Persia are armed with them. They are chiefly manufactured at Laar. including Planked Yard, Force Pump and Hose, When used they are partly supported by atkind of fork, fastened on the extremity of the barrel. The percussion guns u ed in Persia are of European manufacture, and the most expensive of them which are bought by the nobility only, come from England. Cheaper ones, for the common people, come from Belgium. The Persians are good shots, but no sports-
