FOUNDERING OF A VESSEL IN THE FRITH OF FORTH-LOSS OF ALL HANDS.

The Scotsman gives the following accant of a disaster which has occurred in the Frith of Forth :-

"Early on Saturday morning, the steamtug Pet, Ferrie, master, left Leith and steamed down the Frith in the hope of picking up any vessel to tow to Leith or Granton. When cruising about between the Bass Rock and the Isle of May she fell in with a schooner labouring in a heavy sea against a head wind and the master engaged to tow her up the Frith. A rope was transferred to the schooner, and steam being raised the tug's head was put about, and an adventurous voyage up the Frith began. The wind blew strongly right in their teeth, and the son, al ready running high, rose higher as they both tug and schooner battled with the wind and tide, but not much progress was made; still no fears were entertained low spirits, frightful dreams, and a gradual waist struggle against the gale and he wy sea with the schooner in tow, he fail d to inompletely cleanse the stomach—thereby doirs influenced by a desire to retain the whole asking the assistance of the two Leith tugs. An amusing story of DeQuincey was, in effect, as follows :- One morning De-Quincey came rushing into Sinclair' house, both hands extended, his hair and dress in great disorder, exclaiming, " hide me! hide me!" The sea was running so high at the time the schooner foundered that no boat could have lived in it, and Manufacturer's no hope is entertained of the safety of any of the crew. When morning dawned the topmasts of the Snowdrop were observed above the water, about a mile and a half from Inchkeith, showing that she must have drazged her anchors before settling down.
