LORD STANLEY EXPLAINS WHY THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE "MORE THAN USUALLY RESISTIVE."

The following is a complete report of Lord Stanley's remarks at the Glasgow banquet on "The American Difficulty," as the question at issue between this country and Great Britain is now called by the English papers:

I own that notwithstanding the failure of the late negotiations—that it is a failure there is no denying, but it is a failure, I think, which was not caused by either by anything done or by anything left undone upon our side of the water.

Notwithstanding that, I say, I don't think I can bring myself to take a gloomy view of those relations. (Hear, hear.) Certainly, if we were to judge by the utterances of some American journals, and by those which have been tribulated, justly or unjustly, to some transatlantic politicians, it might seem that our friends on the other side of the ocean were not very easy to please.

But, in the first place, I do not know that any one has spoken of late on their behalf who was authorized to speak authoritatively on the part of the nation; and, in the next place, I think we should recollect and allow for the very peculiar position in which they stand. They have had a great military success—success unexampled in its way—and they are finding out now practically—that we had an opportunity of finding out just half a century ago—that military glory, even when acquired in the best of all possible causes, is a very expensive luxury.

(Laughter and applause.) But, in the first place, I do not know that any one has spoken of late on their behalf who was authorized to speak authoritatively on the part of the nation; and, in the next place, I think we should recollect and allow for the very peculiar position in which they stand.
