THEATRICAL .- " Caste" was repeated at the theatre last night to a good and appreciative house, under the patronage of Major Buller. The acting was very much better than we have been secustomed to, even by dramatic companies of high pretensions. To-night Miss Marriott, the great English tragedienne, makes her appearance in Sheridan Knowles' play of " The Hunchback," when a full house may be expected. The reputation of Miss Marriott is well known in Montreal and other Canadian cities, as well as throughout the States and in England. Mr. Marshall has acted wisely in securing her services, because she is certain to draw full houses whereever she plays.

Since then renewed efforts have been made to arrest the desperado, and in order to effect the object a reward of $10,000 has been offered

It is probable that this large amount will nduce men of nerve and shrewdness to undertake his capture; but it is generally be-lieved that Hildebrand will never be taken alive. He knows that he will receive no mercy at the hands of the law, and that his capture will result in ignominious death. It is conjectured that Hildebrand is making his way toward the Mississippi. Those who formerly harboured and assisted him have become alarmed, and are now anxious that he should be brought to justice. It is hoped that the people of the river towns will be on
