PEACHES-A LARGE CROP THIS YEAR.

From the Wilmington (Del.) Republican. New York can't eat many peaches after all ler market is entirly too easly glutted for he satisfaction of our peach-growers. If there were any real effort in the metropolis to secure a rapid distribution of the fruit, and especially its transhipment north-ward, the price would never fall so low in the city as to scarcely pay fraight on the fruit Some of the more enterprising of our peach-growers propose if a similar state of affairs exist this year, to unite in a project to remedy it in the uture, and that is to secure, with the cooperation of the railroad companies a large steamer similar to the Margland, long used on the Susquehanna for transferring trains on the Philadelphia. Wilmington, and Baltimore Railroad, and taking the trains around New York city by water to the termini of the various railways, and thus avoid unnecessary reshipment. The growers are shall quote the most essential portion not discouraged by the fear that the large crop will reduce the prices below a paying point as they intend making through arrangments to secure the shipment of the fruit to interior towns and cities, so as to relieve the pres P. R. Bowers of St. Stephen, a most intellisure on the markets of the great cities. After this year the Wilmington and Reading Railroad will afford them fine opportunities to this, and when the Wilmington and Western Road is completed an entirely new market will be opened for our fruit.
