A LIVE LORD IN NEW YORK.

The New York Telegram of the 2nd gives the following account of an aristocratic entertainment in that city:— "An entertainment of a most delightful character, attended with a long time anticipated by our up-to-date fashionables, was enjoyed yesterday at the residence of Captain Oliver, in West Twenty-third street. We allude to the dejeuner a la fourchette given by Lord Hubert L. C. Ainsley to his young lady and gentlemen friends, in the beautiful home, Miss Lillie Martin of Staten Island. The delicate little rosette notes of invitation gotten up in recherche style, were issued on Friday last, and couched as follows:— "Lord Ainsley would be pleased to see you on Friday, October 1, at noon. Departs. No. — West Twenty-third street."

DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES OF FURS.

That fur is not more generally used by both sexes in this country is doubtless because of their expensiveness, and not from want of appreciation of their great utility, richness and beauty. It is no extravagance to assert that every farmer's family robes, with trifling expense, from the resources within their own reach; but from want of more knowledge on this subject valuable skins are wasted or disposed of for a mere fraction of their real value, and articles of apparel that should have been made from them are bought at exorbitant prices for dealers.

SCRIPTURAL INTERPOLATIONS.

While it is perfectly well known to scholars that the most ancient codices of the New Testament want very many of the words and phrases which we find in the ordinary received editions, it is not a fact so clearly understood by ordinary readers in many cases have been quite a character as to find in every chapter, instances may be found in every chapter, of the former, the Pall Mall Gazette, noticing Tischendorf's Tauchnitz Bible, points out some examples. Thus, the narrative of the woman taken in adultery, in the Gospel of John, the last twelve verses of the Gospel of St. Mark, the conversation with the Pharisees on the morning and evening skies, have all been interpolated—at least, they are not found in the earliest manuscripts, while they gradually creep into the later codices. These differences, of course, arose from the difficulty of copying and from the difficulty of commentators who often introduced remarks which were not in the text, merely meant as comments, but which later were accepted as portions of the body of the text.
