HIS Royal Highness Prince ARTHUR left for the Upper Ottawa on his proposed trip at an early hour this morning. It is expected he will return on Friday next.

A meeting of the Privy Council was held to-day, at which routine matters only were disposed of.

General DOYLE, Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia, started en route for Ottawa, but at St. John was obliged to return to Halifax on business of importance.

THE "Ottawa correspondent" of the Globe has given evidence of his return to Ottawa, in the publication in that paper of one of the sensational fabrications which that person so industriously transmits to Toronto. The industrious, but not over scrupulous correspondent, returns to his usual "it is reported." He states that "it is reported" a deficiency has been found in the Post Office Department. The fabrication has certainly been reported by the Globe's correspondent, but, we feel confident, by no other than an individual equally inventive—if such can be found in the city. We are authorized to contradict the statement.

THE calling out of the volunteers shortly before the arrival of HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS in this city has been made the subject of some comment throughout the country. Some have rather carelessly considered the entire matter in the light of another Fenian scare. It was no scare which prompted the authorities to demand the services of our volunteer force for a short space of time. The well known treachery of those men who have cast aside all the better impulses which bind the human race in a tie of civilization—the lamentable absence of all good and inspiring principle which has characterized their every act from the beginning—the attempt made on the life of a member of the Royal Family, one who, in no way could be responsible for the "wrongs" they claim to exist—their most foul and fearful act of April, 1868, by which Canada was despoiled of one of the noblest directors that ever gave the wisdom and statesmanship which guide a young and striving people to success—all these coupled with a well founded rumour of an intent on the person of PRINCE ARTHUR, prompted the authorities to appeal to the loyalty of our noble volunteers. The call was quickly responded to, and the base intention conceived in treachery has terminated in cowardice on the part of the miscreants. The act of the Government was wise—a preventative is always better than a cure. The country can, however, congratulate itself on the ready action of the Government, and the equally ready and patriotic attendance of the volunteers.

THE Globe indulges in an ill-natured and ungenerous leader on the installation of Sir FRANCIS HINCKS as Finance Minister of the Dominion. The entire spirit of the article betrays the very feelings which the dictator of that sheet would most wish to conceal—the bitterness of a man whose repeated defeats, and whose selfish policy have sent him to the private life he now endures—a position not followed by either the honours of the Crown, or the plaudits of the people. He appears to be in that state of feeling wherein the smaller mind grinds its moral teeth over the success of an old master who has been charitable enough to forget broken faith and treachery. It is seriously a matter to be regretted that HER MAJESTY passed over the merits which are indirectly, on every available occasion, referred to in the Globe, and rested her Royal favour on Sir FRANCIS HINCKS. The Globe's record of consistency—not to say of honesty—for a dishonest public man may appear consistent—is one which characterizes a village politician, and with a like persistency comes forward to-day to stir up those long worn out feelings of party, which were actually sent to the far past by Sir FRANCIS HINCKS—from whose theory sprang much of the progressive politics of to-day. The Globe, however, while endeavouring to make the mischief it can, disregarding the welfare of the Dominion which it openly sustains, and while "conjuring" no good "spirits" from the "deep" of our short history, still, with a hypocracy, which Sir FRANCIS could well recall, but which he must despire, inflicts on the public a rodomontade on political morality. The show business of the Globe is well advertised—the display fair; but the interior will not satisfy the audience. We say show business; for it appears to be so ridiculously Quixotic on the part of the gentleman of the Globe to refer to the past history and present connection of Sir FRANCIS HINCKS with the Government, and cast such reference to the public without first having made a slight retrospect himself. The political relations between the managing director of the Globe, and the Premier were not more agreeable for a long period than were those of Sir FRANCIS HINCKS. Sir JOHN's corrosive remarks in reference to the managing director, on the floor of the House, are, to judge from the spirit of the article, matters of good remembrance with the latter: ergo the allusion to words which have ever been exchanged by public men since, in the first assemblage of patriarchs was held, in which the first opinion was disputed. It is usual for man, during his moments of ease or to forget all his own weaknesses while publishing those of another. In this sense the director of the Globe represents that not over generous part of our common nature to perfection. While censuring Sir FRANCIS HINCKS for extending his great abilities, his long experience, and giving assurance of unswerviving faith in the recognition which he has received from the Crown, to the service of a people who require such a distinguished attention as he will give to their interests; and while bringing back a past forgotten to all else, but the Globe which it haunts as BANQUO's ghost did MACBETH—the managing director of that paper has forgotten that after all his acrimony against, and endeavours to upset the present Government—aye, after the gall which he had to taste on Penitentiary Committees, smilingly administered by Sir JOHN, himself, he very willingly fell into the ranks as colleague of the PREMIER. The service of the managing director of the Globe, as a "Cabinet "Minister has been simply a tradition, and a "name" (vide Globe October 12th). It is quite natural that he should forget the circumstances of his own history in aspersing one, who has been called upon to render duty to a country which claims his services as necessary for its prosperity.

The pretention of the Globe, being for the general interests of the Dominion, should be brought to substance by congratulation, rather than the contrary, of the advent of Sir FRANCIS HINCKS, in connection with his position of Finance Minister. The director of the Globe, and Sir FRANCIS have both been at the head of the Department of Finance, in times past. The Director of the Globe it may be said, had no opportunity during his forty eight hours' administration, of exercising his powers for much good or for much evil, notwithstanding the fact that in that short time, a successful raid was made on the Bank of Upper Canada for an astonishing amount, for so short a time, and in which the then dignitary was said to have been interested. The Globe makes use of the word ostracized: the public are of opinion that Sir JOHN, at a more recent date, inscribed a name on the shell, more familiar to the Director of the Globe that of our Finance Minister.

We subjoin an article clipped from the Durham Chronicle, the author of which we believe to be one of the most honest, clear-thinking and useful politicians in the Dominion. We invite our readers to a perusal of its contents.

The appearance of Sir Francis Hincks in Canada, after an absence of fifteen years, and just at the moment when the Dominion is in want of a skilled financier, has been regarded by some persons, who are strangers to any higher incentive than that of selfishness, as the result of concert and arrangement between that gentleman and the Premier. The assurance of Sir Francis Hincks to the contrary should be a satisfactory answer on this subject, for we have yet to learn that he has ever been accused of uttering a deliberate falsehood. That Sir Francis should re-visit the land of his adoption, and of the proposed home of his eventide, at a time when thoughtful men were compelled to admit, humiliating as it may be, that neither from the ranks of the ministerial majority nor from those of the opposition could a selection be made that would meet the requirements of the case, is not remarkable; neither is it to be wondered at that persons especially charged with the responsibility of providing for the efficient discharge of public duties should regard his being here, at this particular juncture, as a fortunate coincidence. The circumstances are quite sufficient to account for the phenomenon, and the only wonder is that anybody should wonder at a matter of common-place a character as that the Premier should be anxious to strengthen his Government, by availing himself of the services of ex-Governor Hincks. And then in reference to Sir Francis himself, what more natural than that he should feel a paternal interest in his own offspring? The Government of to-day bears the impress of the hand that moulded it on the 11th of September, 1854—the day on which the late Sir Allan McNab became President of the Executive Council. Since that day partyism in Canada has been dissolving. Questions which had long been in dispute were settled. The elements of controversy had become exhausted. Since that time party has existed on the traditions of parliamentary differences. * * * *

The chief want of the Dominion is a comprehensively intelligent Government. The people care much less about the instruments than the thing itself. Except on the part of office-seekers, or of some who fancy that they have established a claim on the existing occupants of place, there is no enthusiastic attachment to persons. Who, for instance, is more firmly seated, officially, than Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, and who is less encumbered by attaches on personal grounds? To what is Sir John A. indebted for the majorities by which he has been sustained since 1867, especially but to the absence of conflicts of popular interest? To habilitate the frame work of the Dominion requires not only the exercise of ability, but constant application. The Government has been generously sustained in its efforts to this end. It is quite probable, and that before very long, that some great questions of importance will be developed into active dispute, but until two cardinal classes of interests are brought into action against each other, it would be worse than an act of folly to give more than a passing heed to differences which originate in disappointed ambition, or which are maintained by personal feeling.

It is a fact of which we have heretofore, as now, taken note with much satisfaction, that the parliamentary opposition, coeval with the birth of the present one, has been of a kind which reflects credit upon its leaders. We are not now referring to those ephemeral subdivisions which owe their paternity to local or sectional jealousies, but to those who direct what is called the forces of her Majesty's opposition, but who are not yet equal to the bold experiment of discarding the trammels to which they became accustomed in the days of their subserviency; but the day of complete deliverance is steadily approaching. Sir Francis Hincks has been a political partizan, and may, for aught we know, have some love of the old leaven of radicalism in his composition; but if his wisdom has kept on increasing with his years, as we hope it has, this of itself may be regarded as reasonable conservative security, but when there is the additional security of fifteen years of approved service as the representative of her Majesty in important colonies, it would be unpardonable to question his loyalty. This fact—that of his fifteen years' absence—has been used as furnishing an argument of want of adaptation. There would have been force in such an objection if Sir Francis had been enjoying himself in seclusion or retirement, but when it is remembered that he was required to charge himself with a much larger amount of executive responsibility than is conceded to the Governors of such colonies as we are familiar with, the force of the objection is much weakened. Again, it was a charge against Mr. Hincks that when he was at the head of the Government in Canada he was in advance of the age; that his ideas of progress and self-government anticipated a much higher order of intelligence than then prevailed. This may be admitted without disparagement to Sir Francis, for according to Mr. Mill, no mean authority in these matters, "in many cases, though individuals may not do the particular thing so well, on the average, as the officers of Government, it is nevertheless desirable that it should be done by them, rather than by the Government, as a means of their own mental education—a mode of strengthening their active faculties, exercising their judgment, and giving them a familiar knowledge of the subjects with which they are thus left to deal." But independently of this philosophic view of the matter, even if Sir Francis had taken a Rip Van Winkle sleep for the last fifteen years, he may be able still to start fair with the Canadian spirit of the age. If Sir Francis accepts the position, he intends to discharge the duties which it demands. Of his ability no one seriously doubts. There is only one other man known to public life in Canada that has been named as a possible rival to Sir Francis under any circumstances. That gentleman is not now in political life, therefore it would be ungenerous to institute comparisons. We look upon Government as being the application of the collective force of society. We don't attach much importance to this man or that man, neither are we particularly awe struck when confronted with knighthood, but we will do respectful homage to any man or set of men whose activity does not attempt to impede, but which aids and stimulates individual exertion and development.

VISIT OF PRINCE ARTHUR TO THE UPPER OTTAWA.

RECEPTION AT AYLMER.

PRESENTATION OF ADDRESS.

UP THE RIVER TO LES CHATS.

Starting from Ottawa this morning about half-past six, a sharp hour's drive brought us to the thriving town of Aylmer. The drive from Ottawa at this season of the year shows the scenery along the road to the best advantage. Handsome residences, well kept farm houses, and fine stock yards are met with, without any break as we drive along. The occasional views of the river caught between the groves of maple trees are picturesque and varied. As we passed along we observed that Mr. W. McKay Wright had erected a handsome arch decorated with flags and pennons at the entrance to his residence. Several other private residences along the road were also gaily decorated with flags, the national colours floating bravely to the morning breeze; but perhaps the best impression the Prince could receive of the character of the country and of the people, would be derived from the evidences of wealth and thrift which were everywhere visible in the well tilled fields and full barns standing back among the maples, which stretched here and there in picturesque groves down to the river bank.

An arch was erected at the entrance of the town of Aylmer, and opposite the residence of the late John Eagan, Esq., now occupied by his son-in-law, M. Thistle, and all the houses along the main street were decorated with flags and evergreens. The street was lined on either side with small ever green trees from the entrance down to the steamboat pier. The office of the Aylmer Times was decorated with flags of many colors and unknown nationalities. Driving up to the Aylmer Hotel, kept by our old friend Moses Holt, we were in good order to enjoy the substantial breakfast which mine host of "Holt's hotel," knows so well how to serve. Mr. Holt's hotel was also gaily decorated with flags and evergreens.

The next arch which especially attracted our attention was one very handsomely decorated, opposite Mr. Conroy's residence, surmounted with the words, "Welcome Arthur." On going down to the steamboat Ann Sisson we found Mr. Cassels and Mr. Reynolds waiting the arrival of his Royal Highness. The boat displayed the Union Jack at the peak and the Royal Standard was raised after the Prince came on board. Every other available point to hang a colour on the boat was utilized, and the steamer presented a mass of waving flags and streamers. At 8½ a.m. the Prince and his Excellency the Governor General drove down to the boat through the main street, which was lined with an enthusiastic crowd, every man, woman and child in the town joining to cheer the Prince, who bowed to the people on either side. A very fine arch with the motto "Welcome to the Prince" in scarlet letters, and the Union Jack and St. Andrew's cross floating above was erected at the head of the pier. The Prince and his Excellency were accompanied by Col. Elphinstone, Col. McNeil, A.D.C., Col. and Mrs. Early, Miss King and Mr. Pickard, R.A.V.C. The Prince was received by Mr. Cassels and Mr. Reynolds, Capt. Findlay and Capt. Cowley; and the Mayor, W. McLean, Esq., having been presented to the Prince, proceeded to read the address of the Mayor and Corporation of Aylmer. We observed among the gentleman present the Councillors of Aylmer.

The Prince then read the following reply:

To the Mayor and Corporation of Aylmer:

GENTLEMEN,—Your expressions of loyalty and attachment to the Queen will be most gratifying to her Majesty.

I thank you sincerely for your kind welcome to myself, and beg to assure you that my visit to Canada will be remembered by me with unquestionable pleasure, more especially this interesting tour up the River Ottawa.

ARTHUR.

Three hearty cheers were then given, and the Prince then walked on board the steamboat, the gangway of which was carpeted, and accompanied by his suite, Mrs. Early and Miss King, went up on the saloon deck. Their appearance was again hailed with hearty cheering, and the lines being unshipped, the good steamboat Ann Sisson, Capt. Robert Finlay, master, got under way, and moved slowly off from the wharf, amid enthusiastic cheering and the waving of handkerchiefs from the ladies who thronged all the windows in the offices of the Inland Navigation Company. A party of ladies, Mrs. Thistle, Miss Eagan, the Misses Lafontaine, accompanied by Mr. Cassels, jr., were on board the boat, and made the trip up the river. Mr. Rankin, M. P., was also on board, on his way to Cobden. The following members of the press accompanied the party: Mr. Cunningham, of the Globe; Mr. Walsh, of the Ottawa Times and Leader; Mr. Todd, of the Telegraph; Mr. O'Brien, of the Ottawa Citizen, and Mr. Allan, of the Aylmer Times.

The Prince was dressed in a heavy grey overcoat, and walked up and down the saloon deck for a time with the Governor-General and the ladies of his party.

The morning was somewhat overcast, and a fresh breeze was blowing down the river. After the Ann Sisson, which was given exclusively for the Prince's party, had got under way, the steamer Emerald put off from the pier, carrying the regular mails and passengers, and steamed up the river. The sun came out as we steamed in sight of the Chats. Reached Pontiac at 11 a.m. Took the cars of the Union Railway, and went on board the steamer Alliance. The scenery as we approached the Chats, was magnificent. The woods a mass of variegated colours, the red and yellow of the maples and the dark colours of the evergreens forming a striking contrast. The Prince was delighted with the beauty of scenery, and the different points of interest were explained to him by Messrs. Cassels and Reynolds as the boat steamed rapidly up the stream. The Prince was greeted with cheers as we approached the landing at Pontiac.

CABLE NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The "Times" on Fenian and Money Matters.

LONDON, October 12.—Lord Derby is seriously ill.

The news to-day is unimportant.

The Times, in an editorial on the Fenian amnesty meetings, says the Crown is invited to pardon rebels who do not pretend to be penitent, not because the conspiracy is crushed, but because it is still formidable enough to rally sympathisers. No one doubts the right of the Government to suppress with rigour outrages against law and order. Had the forbearance of the Crown been invoked in a becoming tone, with recognition of its right to protect peaceable and loyal citizens, an amnesty might be a message of peace. At present we see no presumption that it would be received in that spirit by the demanders, while it must operate as a discouragement to those who laboured to crush Fenian outbreaks. There can be no greater impolicy that such an act, if Ireland is still Fenian at heart, or hostile to the Government. We believe a majority of the Irish people would rejoice at the suppression of Fenianism.

The Times has an editorial to-day on financial matters in the United States. The writer says there may be circumstances in the financial position of the United States authorising the glaring departure from sound rules of public economy, but it is difficult to deny that a mere struggle of gamblers, by an act of the Government, is manifested into an event of national importance. If Mr. Boutwell had wished more money would have changed hands, more fortunes been made or marred other brokers gone mad, absconded or committed suicide, and the threat against Fiske might have been executed. It is not easy to decide whether this will be for good or evil.

Severe Fighting.

MADRID, October 12.—A considerable force of the Government troops was prepared for, and about to attack the position of the Republicans at Valencia this morning. Yesterday active hostilities were suspended during a space of two hours to allow time for the recovery of the dead and wounded on both sides. The inhabitants of the district comprised within the suburbs of Valencia have effectually destroyed the railroad for a distance of seven leagues, so that the Government now receives the news from that part of the country by sea only. During the recent battle at Saragossa there were 250 men killed and wounded.

RAL SHOW.

From the Aylmer Times.

The annual Show Fair of the county of Ottawa, for 1869, took place at the village of Chelsea, on the 28th September. The weather was cold and bracing, but clear and fine. The grounds were prepared on the farm of Mr. Hudson, and a large shed was erected temporarily for the display of the agricultural and dairy products, fancy goods, &c. This structure was tastefully decorated with evergreens, flags, and flowers; the Union Jack floating from the roof in the breeze.

A large number of persons of both sexes assembled at an early hour on the grounds. When we arrived the entire village was crowded with horses and vehicles of all descriptions; and on arriving at the grounds, we found an immense multitude standing around the centre ring where the animals were being exhibited, besides numerous parties scattered all over the field, looking at overgrown pigs, enormous bulls, handsome carriage horses, wonderful large calves, fancy poultry and geese, not forgetting the pretty little ducks. The exhibition this year was the largest in every department of any yet held in this county, either at Chelsea or Aylmer; and to the many extra prizes liberally contributed by several worthy gentlemen, we think is to be attributed the evidently increased interest which the people have taken in this year's show.

There was a very large number of thorough bred cattle exhibited by Hamilton Bros., Gilmour & Co., Alonzo Wright, M. P., and Robert Kenny, Esq., all of which we presume will be shown at the Ottawa city exhibition this week, and we have little doubt but that they will hold their own with any competitors. Kenny made a fine show in sheep, as he always does, and we may say that we never saw a finer show of horses of all kinds.

A large number of agricultural implements and machines were shown, principally owned by Gilmour & Co. Some excellent iron ploughs and a potato digger, made by T. Smith of Aylmer, drew considerable attention.

In vegetables there was a fine display, much exceeding any former year.

Splendid samples of wheat, oats, barley, peas and beans were shown.

In the dairy department we never saw a finer nor better show of butter, about twenty-five samples, all to our unsophisticated eyes equally good, and it is to us a mystery how the judges could discriminate between them.

In the ladies' department, the home made cloth, mitts, socks, quilts, shawls, blankets, rugs and fancy works, the quantity shown, and the quality of the goods was far beyond our most sanguine expectations. Amongst the fancy work we cannot refrain to mention the shirts shown by the Misses Cassidy; nor the beautiful sample of leather work, a picture frame, by Mrs. John Hudson.

In the horticultural department the show of flowers was small, but the beautiful collection so exquisitely selected, and exhibited by John Mather, Esq., well merited the prize awarded.

The dinner was furnished at the hotel of Thomas Moore, Esq., and was an excellent spread. A large number sat down to the well-filled board, and after the cloth was removed some excellent speeches were made; those especially by the President and Vice-President, and after three cheers were given for her Majesty the party broke up. The good people of Chelsea have every reason to congratulate themselves upon the success of this year's show, and upon the excellent arrangement which had been made. The following is the list of prizes awarded:—
