BEARDS AND THEIR USES. HUSBAND.

The question of beards for the army has recently again been brought under notice, and the repeal of military shaving orders has been asked lor, on the triple ground of economy, appearance, and bu manity. The best argument in support of this demand may be found in the 10 HHDS PORT WINE (18 years old) vintage 1851, 1858, and 1880. Unrivaled in the Dominion for quality and prices. For general principle that the life of a soldier in time of peace should be such as to prepare him for war, and in the fact that war sweeps shaving orders away. George Brown was the reputed author of a compound assertion that might have been borrowed from the Oxford pluck papers. He said, "Where there was hair there was dirt, and where there was dirt there was disease." .. He had therefore something that passed with him for a reason why shaving should be enforced, but yet he failed to enforce it. Razors were lost, and beards grew, in spite of him. There can be no reasonable doubt that he was altogether wrong, and that beards furnish a protection that nothing can fully replace. The immunity from cuinsy of those who wear them is well known and highly instructive; and they must certainly be, to some extent, useful as respirators. The argument from appearance brings the question beyond the reach of discussion; but it must be conceded that, at present, the national taste is in favour of the beard. And it seems hard to compel a man to undergo a sort of mutilation, only because he wears a red coat, and has sworn to defend his country.-Lancet

Dr. Kirk has also forwarded despatches from Livingstone to the Secretaries of State for Foreign Affairs and India, and also a letter to myself; but when I left London on Wednesday, none of these letters had reached their destination. "The following is an outline of the information communicated to me :-" Dr. Livingstone had traced a chain of lakes, conneted by rivers, from the tracts south of the Lake Tanganyike to south latitude 10 degrees, to 12 degrees, and he conjectures that these numerous connected lakes and rivers are the ultimate southern source of the Nile. upon either side of kneeling camels or When he wrote he was about to travel into baskets upon donkeys. KHIVA ROBBERS IN RUSSIA. The Invalide Russe, organ of the Russian War Office, announces in its number of the 23rd ult, that a detachment, consisting of two companies of infantry, a sotnia of Cossacks, and two some uneven ground near the lake, where guns, has been sent to the left bank of the Syr-Daria, " in order to prevent any incursions from Khiva, and to protect the tant and, although one knows what Khirgs tribes from plunder." It explains this significant announcement by supply of labour, it is a marvel to reflect stating for the last six months Khiva has been sending robber-bands into Russia for the purpose of plundering the Khirgiz subjects, and that Khiva and Kashgar are now the only states in everything ready for their reception, where now is nothing but bare sand.
